Wasting the Native Born Those Shrunken Heads Burning the Shack Earth's Danger Spot

—By [illegible] Brisbane—

REFERRING TO NATIONAL HOSPITAL DAY," President Hoover writes: "Our citizens will never rest content until the poorest children in our cities, the loneliest mothers on our isolated farms, have the comfort and protection of good hospitals."

Most important is adequate medical care for the lonely mothers, when their children are born.

Skilful obstetrics dates back only a few years, and has been limited largely to the prosperous class. Until recent years childbirth was left to the mercy of unscientific midwives.

When trained surgeons began attending women in childbirth deaths seemed to be more frequent.

Thousands of mothers are still sacrificed every year to lack of care and to the ignorance or carelessness of those supposed to give care.

It was Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes, once a teacher at the Harvard Medical School, who told the world's doctors: "You have been killing mothers in childbirth with your own hands."

He referred to the fact that doctors came from other patients, or from work in the dissecting room, to handle childbirth cases, hands unwashed and covered with germs.

Antiseptics were unknown.

The doctors, highly indignant, said mothers died because Providence wishes them to die. Had not Eve and all her daughters been threatened with childbirth troubles for listening to the snake?

Now doctors clean their hands, wear rubber gloves and in good practice it can no longer be said that "one might as well deliver a woman to the guillotine as to the bed of confinement."

Mortality in childbirth is higher in America than in any other civilized country. A good recommendation for this richest nation, which pretends to value the native born so highly.

The Museum of the American Indian exhibits interesting "shrunken heads" of South American Jivaro Indians.

The Jivaros kill their enemies, cause the skull to shrink by a secret process and preserve them as fetishes. The spirit of the slaughtered enemy imprisoned in his shrunken skull is compelled to work magic in favor of the enemy that killed him.

Christianity will not let us believe that as we look at the strange little head, smaller than your fist with features and long black hair preserved as in life. But wonder what will be done about bringing them back, as "in the flesh" for the judgment day.

Will those Jivaros appear for judgment with shrunken heads on broad shoulders, or will a special miracle give them back their full sized heads, as another miracle, doubtless, will restore heads to the bodies of those guillotined in France and beheaded by axemen and swordsmen elsewhere.

Hjalmar Blomberg, former constable, was found guilty of arson, having set fire to a shack said to be used for distilling liquor. Judge Risjord in Wisconsin sets aside the verdict because arson means destroying property by fire, and a whiskey shack has "no property right in it."

The law is the law and it's not for laymen to interpret it.

But an alleged whiskey shack, property right or no property right, might have children sleeping in it.

It is to be hoped that prohibition enforcers will make sure about that before starting the fire.

Too many shootings and burnings might arouse prejudice against prohibition.

Newton D. Baker, former Secretary of War, says Chicago loop is the most dangerous spot on earth. Gen. Pershing's divisions were not as fully armed as guards who stand at machine gun turrets while a bag of gold is moved from one side of a street to the other.

There is one place more dangerous than Chicago's loop Mr. Baker will identify it if he will take his money to New York's Wall Street and play the game that is played there.

If you throw up your hands and keep quiet Chicago's gunmen will take only what you happen to have with you.

Wall Street does things in a more thorough manner. You can face any gunman without loss when the ticker gets through with you. Many Americans will realize that shortly.

That would be a good thing for Great Britain. Lloyd George is the ablest British leader in more than 100 years.

Grand Jury Advised to Wait on 'Fraud'

JEALOUS HUSBAND CLUE IN STUDENT'S SLAYING

GRAND JURY ADVISED TO WAIT

The Suffolk County Grand Jury was advised today by Judge Williams of the Superior Court to take no independent action before the district attorney has received and had a chance to analyze the evidence in the case.

District-Attorney Foley today received from the Finance Commission the complete transcript of evidence in the Exchange st. case which the commission took at its hearings on the matter. There are 1051 typewritten pages.

It had been rumored that the Grand Jury was to take independent action in the Exchange st. and Boston Schoolhouse Commission cases.

The jury adjourned until the first Monday in June. District Attorney Foley also addressed the members in their regular private session, it is understood, and Judge Williams' remark followed when they went in before him to report their work completed for the month.

Following their adjournment it was rumored that they had taken a vote to "postpone" calling Chairman John C. L. Dowling of the Finance Commission, which conducted an investigation of the Exchange st. deal, and Judge Michael H. Sullivan, chairman of the special school survey committee, which probed the affairs of the Schoolhouse Commission.

In accordance with custom, the Grand Jury made an inspection of the institution after adjournment, choosing the Concord Reformatory.

"I think I will take this occasion to address you mainly because of what I have seen in the headlines of the daily papers," said Judge Williams. "I think it is my duty to give you further instructions of what I believe is the duty of the Grand Jury.

"There is no question you are an

LAWYERS CALL JUDGES OLD

Because no less than five judges of the superior bench are physically incapacitated for their duties, the congestion in the superior court in Boston has become so serious it is impossible to obtain a trial in a reasonable time, according to a delegation of lawyers who waited upon Governor Allen at noon today.

They laid the blame for the situation upon the administration at the state house, because of failure to get legislation relating to pensions for judges.

In the delegation which represented the Law Society of Massachusetts, were Edward M. Dangel, William M. Shaughnessy, Felix Mercella and Abraham Berkowitz. They presented a resolution to the governor, reciting the alleged physical breakdown of the five judges in question.

Few Bids on School Repairs

Without competitive bidding, the Boston schoolhouse commission had more than 80 per cent of its school building repair and remodeling done in the last three and a half years, it is revealed by the report of certified public accountants who scrutinized the department's records.

Besides making this discovery the examiners made a detailed inspection of payments for this type of work over a nine months period and reported finding a large number of items just under $100, which kept them in the non-competitive bidding class.

The report also discloses instances of several orders to a single contractor for similar work and almost on the same day, each of these orders being under $1000.

The total amount of public money spent for repairs and remodeling of Boston school structures without competitive bidding between February 1, 1925, and September 30, 1928, was $4,555,906.30. The total amount for all repair and remodel work was $5,501,509.33, so that only

DEATH TAKES STALLINGS

The death of George Stallings former manager of the Boston Braves, at his home in Haddock, today, saddened Hub baseball fans who remembered the famous 1914 Braves whom Stallings led to a pennant back in pre-war days.

Stallings had been suffering from heart trouble for several years, and it was this ailment which finally caused his death in the little Georgia town where he made his home.

Stallings was manager and owner of the Montreal Club in the International League last season, but was forced to leave his team early

AGAIN LINK 'L' TO POWER

The pending bill extending public control of the Boston Elevated was again linked with the Power Trust by Chairman Henry I. Shattuck of Boston at a hearing today before his committee.

H. Ware Barnum, counsel for the Elevated trustees, one of the drafters of the bill, was before the committee to explain the 64 sections. The bill passed the Senate with virtually no debate.

In the course of his questioning of Barnum, Shattuck, picking the bill to pieces, brought out that one section gives the trustees authority to make contracts unlimited in scope.

"Under this section the trustees

REFUSES PLEA OF DOCTOR

The petition of Dr. Frederick Dugdale of Lowell that he be reinstated as a licensed physician was refused today by Judge Pierce of the Supreme Court.

The judge upheld the board of registration in cancelling the doctor's license on the ground that he had obtained money from Nellie Whitehouse of Allston by falsely representing her to be ill with cancer.

On a second charge that the physician had informed another patient, the late Mrs. Mary Caton of New Bedford, that she was recovering from cancer when he knew she was really dying, Judge Pierce overruled the registration board.

LAST PLEA TO SPARE KNOWLTON

An eleventh hour plea for the life of Frederick H. Knowlton, condemned to die shortly after midnight tonight in the electric chair, was made by his wife and Atty. Thomas F. Cassidy of Cheshire to Gov. Frank G. Allen today.

They were accompanied by relatives and friends, including Rep. Lawrence Blackburn, pastor of the Ashfield Federated Church.

At about the same time the second man's stepmother, Mrs. Frederick H. Knowlton, and his aunt, Mrs. A. Hammond, paid a farewell visit to him in the death house.

Atty. Cassidy, former member of the Legislature and prominent politician in the Berkshires, arrived with his party at the Governor's office shortly before 11 o'clock. He declined to state on what grounds he would base his request for a respite.

He said he had been retained by the family yesterday to ask for a respite, despite the fact that Governor Allen last week refused to interfere after listening to an appeal.

Mrs. Knowlton and Atty. Cassidy entered the Governor's office at 11:50 a. m. and emerged from be-

They appealed and were released on bail of $300 each. Rogers said they attacked him on the porch of a house on Hawthorne st., Everett.

MRS. GANN AND ALICE CHAT

Washington, May 13 (INS)—Charles Gates Dawes and August Belmont, staid Senate could hardly believe its eyes today when Mrs. Nicholas Longworth and Mrs. Alice Roosevelt Longworth, rival leaders in the capital's great social war, strolled nonchalantly into the gallery together, sat down and proceeded to converse amiably.

An almost audible gasp went around the chamber, and the two immediately became the cynosure of all eyes.

COUPLE SAVE HANGING MAN

A policeman and his wife rescued a painter dangling from a rope and gave first aid to a second painter who had fallen 30 feet from a collapsed staging in South Boston today.

While Patrolman Walter Illingworth was eating breakfast in Emerson st. he heard cries for help. He dashed to a nearby alley.

There he saw Charles P. Ryan hanging from a rope on a East Fifth st. building, and on the ground was the unconscious form of Alfred R. Simpson, 24, of 200 First st., South Boston.

Unable to lift the ladder alone, he called his wife and they raised the ladder and released Ryan.

Simpson's injuries are not dangerous.

FLAPPER WIFE AND LOVE NOTES FIGURE IN HUNTINGTON CASE

By CHESTER M. POTTER
Boston Evening American Staff Correspondent

Windsor, Ct., May 13—A married girl of the flapper type and her husband, said to be a wealthy Springfield, Mass., businessman, were being sought today in connection with the murder of Walter T. Huntington, Harvard junior.

Highly important revelations concerning this woman and her relations with the slain student, and the fact that they were once trailed from Cambridge to Windsor by the jealous husband, were obtained from letters turned over to County Detective Edward J. Hickey.

The letters, four in number, were among several seized by Cambridge police in the room of young Huntington at Harvard, and their contents has been kept secret by Hickey.

Notwithstanding the reticence of the detective, and his reiteration of the suicide theory, it is known that this information has been in his hands since last week when he conferred with Cambridge police.

SOON WERE FRIENDLY.

The letters are another link in the chain of evidence proving that Huntington instead of being studious, reserved girl-shy youth was in reality engaged in almost continual participation in "whoopee" parties with women companions.

They reveal that the woman in question and a girl friend, also married, became acquainted with Huntington during a visit to Cambridge, which extended over a period of several weeks.

The student and the "flapper wife" were soon friendly, the correspondence shows, and their conduct was discussed with frankness.

The most startling revelation, however, was contained in references to an automobile party in Windsor between Huntington and the woman after an automobile trip from Cambridge.

FEARED HIS ANGER

The girl wrote Huntington that her husband had trailed them on this trip, and she is said to have expressed fear of the consequences.

When the murder of Huntington became known, this woman and her chum went into seclusion, and to date all efforts to find them have been unavailing. It was learned that the Springfield police are making an intensive search for them and for the wealthy husband, who is reported missing.

Springfield police have attempted to keep their search a secret, but

LOVE NOTES GIVE CLUE IN DEATH

It is known they are prosecuting it with vigor.

Confirmation of the Springfield angle was seen in the sudden appearance here of Detective Charles E. Kilmer of that city. Found at the scene of the slaying by a representative of the Boston Evening American, Kilmer admitted he was a private investigator, but refused to reveal the name of persons who employed his agency. He merely said he had been instructed to come to Windsor and make a preliminary investigation, including examination of footprints in the meadow of Lovers' Lane where Huntington's body was found.

REPORT ON STAINS

After an inspection of the meadow, Kilmer left in an automobile for Hartford, intimating he would return.

The eagerly awaited report of Dr. Louis P. Hastings of St. Francis Hospital, Hartford, on the analysis of the stains on a woman's handkerchief found in Huntington's pocket was made today but all title to clear up the mystery. Dr. Hastings said the stains were undoubtedly human blood, with no brain tissue.

Detective Hickey was jubilant when he learned of this report, declaring it clinched his suicide theory, notwithstanding the fact that the handkerchief was in the right hand hip pocket, while Huntington's left hand was bloodstained and his right clean.

Medical Examiner Henry M. Costello, to whom the report was made, asserted on the other hand that it did not change his finding of homicide. He reiterated his former statements that it would have been impossible for a man shot through the head to have wiped away the blood and then place a handkerchief in his hip pocket.

Coroner J. Gilbert Calhoun, when told of the analysis of the stains on the handkerchief, said he had expected it would "turn out that way," but did not believe it would influence his own decision, yet to be made.

NO INQUEST LIKELY

Calhoun also said Hickey had not told him of the suicide theory. The coroner said he was out of an "open mind" and that he awaits the finding of the missing pistol before filing a report with State Attorney Alcorn. The coroner will not conduct a formal inquest.

In the meantime, Detective Hickey told newspapermen he had no reason to believe that Huntington's death was other than suicide. At the same time he admitted he was puzzled by the absence of the Huntington family revolver, a .32 calibre automatic pistol some 20 years old.

He admitted he was to hold a conference with State's Attorney Hugh M. Alcorn in Hartford, to which city the chief law officer of Connecticut is hurrying from Washington.

To Alcorn Detective Hickey is understood to be ready to detail the chain evidence which he has painstakingly built up from facts found in the vicinity of the lonely pasture where the 21-year-old Harvard junior, presumably keeping a midnight tryst, was slain.

At last Hickey is willing, it is believed, to divulge the two clues he considers most vital. They have not been mentioned until now. One is declared to be a half-smoked cigarette, stained with rouge from a girl's lips and marked with the definite whorls and loops of a girl's finger print. The other is the photographic record of a man's heel tracks, found, it is claimed, by the roadside at the scene of the tragedy.

ALIBI EASILY DISPROVED

The cigarette has already led Hickey and his associate detectives in Massachusetts, say those close to the inside story of the probe. They aver that a young woman has told the authorities a dramatic tale which accords with an official hypothesis, based on the checking up of the ownership of the heels which left their prints in the death pasture.

Circumstantial as were the bits of evidence which first directed suspicion toward the alleged slayer who is now near arrest, they were empathically substantiated, it is asserted, by a betraying falsehood told by the suspect himself when police, with pretended casualness, interviewed him.

He is declared to have referred with reference to the Huntington case, admitting he knew the murdered youth but asserting that he, himself, was "on a little drunk" on the night of the shooting and was consequently out of touch with what was on in Windsor at that time.

The story, as first told, was not unconvincing, but it had one drawback, say the authorities. It was too easily disproved.

Attempt to Enter Coffee Shop

Prying off a rear door, thieves made an attempt to enter the Hanley Coffee Shop on Massachusetts ave., but were disturbed in their attempt probably by the rounds of the officer on that beat. Police found nothing disturbed.

hind closed doors at 12:30 p. m. They were followed by the Ashlar clergyman who remained until 1:2 when the Governor, and Asst. Att Gen. F. Dariano Putnam, who we with him throughout the confe ences, went to lunch.

Also in Knowlton party were two private detectives employed b the defense, Francis J. O'Lear and J. Leo McInchy, together wit Constable Putnam of Hopkinton, and Charles W. MacNear, chief of police of Ashland.

Following the conference Cassidy announced he had asked for commutation of the death sentence, instead of a respite. He said he based his plea on alleged inconsistent theories of the Commonwealth relative to the happenings on March 29 and 30, 1928, especially March 30, the day the body was found.

WIFE ON LAST VISIT

Rev. Mr. Blackburn read to the Governor the letters written by Knowlton in the death cell—one to his wife and one to his young son.

In the meantime as the hour approached when Knowlton is to pay the law's penalty for the murder of Marguerite Stewart, 20, instructor in a Beverly school, his poise remains unshaken.

Deputy Sheriff Simeon Godenderf, who accompanied his stepmother and aunt to Knowlton's cell, declared him to be a most remarkable type. He said the condemned man smiled on greeting his visitors, who went in one at a time, assured them he was feeling well, and said goodby in a firm tone. His wife was expected to make her last visit this afternoon.

SLEEPS WELL

Warden James L. Hogsett had not notified Knowlton officially of the time of his execution, but from the fact that his relatives are saying goodby, he is believed to be cognizant of it. Nevertheless he ordered a hearty last supper, consisting of roast beef, mashed potatoes, peas, bread and butter, tea, apple pie and fruit salad.

Talk of another move in the courts was dismissed by prison officials who said they were informed every avenue of action in that direction was closed.

After assuring himself that Knowlton was in the same good spirit that has characterized him from the beginning, Warden and playing "rummy" with them.

Slain Harvard Boy Was Called "Wally, Sheik"

Walter Treadway Huntington, slain Harvard junior, was known as "Wally, the Sheik," according to his class publication, "The Tunxis," of the John Fitch high school, Windsor, Ct.

"The Tunxis" referred to Huntington as the best dressed man in the class, and the student with the most brains. His favorite expression was given as "Not Enough," his hobby "Falling down," and his abhorence "Post-Office."

TARIFF ON SUGAR MAY BE MADE VARIABLE

Washington, May 13 (AP)—The tariff schedules proposed by the House Ways and Means Committee on building materials and sugar are receiving close scrutiny at the White House, with clear indications that they fail to meet with the entire approval of President Hoover.

Objection has been raised in administration quarters particularly to the duties on cement and brick which are taken from the free list so as to protect eastern seaboard and gulf coast manufacturers from Belgian competition.

The proposed duty on shingles also is being closely studied, as there is some apprehension that it might turn over the industry in this country to the patent shingle manufacturers and thus destroy the wooden shingle industry.

Advisors of the President are undertaking to work out a substitute for the sugar schedule on the basis of sliding scale of duties with the higher rates applying only under conditions of the keenest sort of competition with the American cane and beet industries during years of excessive production in foreign countries.

Republican leaders today abandoned suggestions for an all-summer recess and determined to mold the big majorities in Congress into working shape for early decisions on the controversial farm relief and tariff issues.

Davis E. Margosian of 7 Lloyd rd., Watertown, left the engine of his motor car running at the top of the driveway while he got out to unlock his garage door. The brakes released and the car slid backward down the incline into the street and into the plate glass window of the Breslin pharmacy at Lloyd rd. and Mt. Auburn st. A wall of the building, a one-story structure, was pushed back about four inches.

Kansas Flood Area Steadily Widens

Topeka, Kan., May 13—Floodwaters, which caused at least two deaths and extensive property damage in central Kansas, were still racing across the southeastern portion of the State and northeastern Kansas and westward today.

Interruption of traffic movement and communications added to the destruction.

James L. Hogsett, with whom rests the decision as to the manner of execution, went to the State House on his regular Monday visit and was to learn there officially whether a delay was likely to be necessary.

FEW BIDS TO REPAIR SCHOOLS

18.67 per cent was done by competitive bidding, while 81.33 per cent was without competition among contractors.

SITE CITY CHARTER

In this connection the accountants call attention to section 30 of the City Charter, which reads, in part, as follows:

"Every officer or board in charge of a department, when authorized to erect a new building or to make structural changes in an existing building, shall make contracts therefor, not exceeding five, each contract to be subject to the approval of the mayor:

"And when about to do any work or to make any purchase the estimated cost of which alone, or in conjunction with other similar work or purchase which might properly be included in the same contract, amounts to or exceeds $1000, shall—unless the mayor gives written authority to do otherwise—invite proposals therefor by advertisement in the City Record.

"No authority to dispense with advertising shall be given by the mayor unless the said officer or board furnishes him with a signed statement which shall be published in the City Record, giving in detail the reasons for not inviting bids by advertisement."

The accountants' report further says:

"A review of the items paid during the nine months ending September 30, 1928, indicates that a large number of these items cost between $800 and $200 each.

"It would seem that no two or more of these items of a similar nature might have been consolidated as one project and proposals invited by advertisements in the City Record, with resulting economies to the city."

CLOSE TO $1000 LIMIT

In the 10 months' period from January 1, 1928, to October 31, 1928, the schoolhouse commission paid $14,802 to one contractor, in amounts of less than $1000 each, for which competitive bidding was not required.

Many of these bills were for amounts close to $1000, the accountants pointed out, and the work was similar in many cases and in some instances occurred on the same day, although at different schools.

Another contractor was paid $14,300 under similar circumstances, in bills of less than $1000, dozens of other firms were paid the same amount, some large and some small, but all bills for items of less than $1000 each. The grand total for this period was $341,823.23, which there was no competitive bidding.

In the 10 and one-half months ending November 14, 1928, according to the report, a single contractor was paid on 131 separate items, many of them under $1000.

Regarding another concern, the accountants reported:

"It will be noted that all contracts for finish hardware for new school buildings in process of construction during the period under review were awarded to one company.

"In a large number of cases, this company was the sole bidder in the field, and in the few lower bids were tendered, such bids were withdrawn and the contracts awarded to this company.

"In the case of larger repair jobs (but less than $1000), blank proposal forms are duplicated with specifications for the work to be done are mailed to certain contractors selected by the department, on which the contractors insert the amounts for which they propose to do the work.

NO DETAILED ESTIMATES

"After such proposals have been returned and one of them has been accepted by the department, a written order is issued instructing the selected contractor to proceed with the work specified on the accepted proposal.

"When the work has been completed, an invoice therefor is rendered to the city. The invoice, after approval by an inspector, together with the original proposal, is then forwarded to the city auditor's office for payment.

"We noted further, that in many instances dated after the acceptance of the proposal, the issuance of the order, and the invoice for the work done, were the same, or varied only a day or two.

"In view of the coincidence of dates noted by us, it would appear that the proposals and specifications might have been made to conform to existing and necessity of rendering detailed bills to the city for work performed.

GIVES EXAMPLES

"In this connection, we submit the following as a few examples of the cases described:

"A proposal made by — — — to lay a granolithic sidewalk and a granolithic driveway at the school for the sum of $768.50 was accepted on April 16, 1925; order was issued on April 16, 1928, covering this work. The invoice rendered was not dated, but it indicated that the work was performed between March 23 and March 30, 1928—that is, the work was done previous to the acceptance of the proposal or issuance of the written order.

"A proposal made by the — company to furnish certain metal ceilings at the school for the sum of $780 was accepted February 27, 1928; order and invoice therefor were also dated February 27, 1928, indicating that the work was nearly completed before the proposal was accepted or the order issued.

3 UNITS OF TRUST IN PROBE

The union of three separate power groups in Massachusetts into a single great holding company known as the Massachusetts Utilities Associates, in which the International Paper & Power Co. and the New England Power interests are factors, may be investigated by a special commission of the Legislature.

This union is revealed in the report filed by the Massachusetts Utilities Associates with the department of public utilities for the year 1928.

Under the Leahy-Hagan resolve, calling for a legislative investigation of the power situation, the activities of public utility holding companies, whether Massachusetts or foreign in their origin, would be investigated, as would their relations with finance, engineering and management companies which have service contracts with operating companies controlled by the holding companies; the issuance of securities by holding companies, based upon their financial interest in the operating companies and the extent to which their security issues are regulated under the Blue Sky law.

Under the Blue Sky law, passed in 1921, among the "exempted" securities are those holding companies issuing securities based upon public utility.

13 PARKER COMPANIES.

The Massachusetts Utilities Associates, the annual return shows, brought together interests representing the International Paper & Power Co. and the New England Power Association, a subsidiary or the International; the Massachusetts Lighting Cos., and the so-called C. D. Parker group of companies.

The Massachusetts Lighting Cos., a holding company, according to its own report, on file with the department of public utilities, controls 18 gas and electric companies. The C. D. Parker group has several small holding companies which hold the stocks of local gas and electric companies.

These holding companies issue their own securities to the public, paying a nominal dividend upon the holding company securities, while drawing down for themselves dividends ranging all the way up to 50 per cent on the common stock of the operating companies which they control, as is indicated by the reports of the holding companies and the operating companies on file at the department.

The organization of the Massachusetts Utilities Associates places on top of the holding companies already mentioned still another holding company. This new organization issued about 1,500,000 shares of its securities in September last, a circular issued by the association disclosed.

TRUSTEES OF UNION

Among the trustees of the Massachusetts Utilities Associates, the 1928 report on file shows, are the following:

Archibald R. Graustein, president, International Paper & Power Co.

Frank D. Comerford, president, New England Power Co.

Charles L. Edgar, president, Edison Electric Illuminating Co. of Boston.

Arthur E. Childs, president, Massachusetts Lighting Co.

Chauncey D. Parker, affiliated with the so-called C. D Parker group the companies.

Other trustees of the new building combines given are:

Charles H. Cox, former Governor and now vice-president of the First National Bank and a trustee of the Boston Publishing Co., publishers of the Herald and Traveler; Henry S. Harriman, former head of the New England Power Association, and B. Loring Young, former speaker of the House and counsel for Graustein at the hearing before the joint committee on rules three weeks ago.

GRAND JURY IS TOLD TO WAIT

Independent body, under ordinary circumstances working in conjunction with the district attorney and his staff of trained assistants, dealing with alleged crimes and filing presentments or indictments on real evidence.

"Ordinarily you deal with matters presented to you by the district attorney or one of his officers or assistants. It is wise that that should be. It is never wise to indulge in hasty prosecution.

"I believe that the ordinary system in most criminal cases, of first having a preliminary hearing in the lower court, works to an excellent advantage of all. This is the general rule in criminal cases, if not the universal rule.

"Ordinarily this procedure of a hearing in the lower court is the best in the long run, and if evidence of criminality is shown in the lower court, of course the defendant is bound over.

"There is a class of cases that I might cite. If you were on some street in the community and witnessed yourself some criminal action, it is your duty then to go ahead on the merits of the case and seek your indictment.

"However, there may be cases where you have not at your disposal first-hand evidence. This case I speak of, of having seen in the papers, is one where at the time there was not in existence or in the hands of your district attorney real evidence. You should not at any time go ahead on rumors or reports.

"We will take, for instance, talk in the street of a community of many persons who live in the immediate, particular vicinity that there is in operation or talk of a disorderly house.

"Mr. Foreman, or any other member of the grand jury, you would not be justified in seeking an indictment on a situation of this kind. In my opinion that is the same true situation that had developed here.

"I venture to say that under the same conditions you should wait until the real evidence or report is in the hands of the district attorney and wait a reasonable time to give the law enforcement agencies an opportunity to carefully analyze such evidence or report that they may have.

"If this evidence shows crime, the district attorney will act. If the district attorney does not act, then you should act. In the interest of the ordinary conduct in this community, you should wait until the district attorney has a chance to completely view the evidence in this case and all cases. If he does not act, your powers remain."

Asst. Dist.-Atty. Daniel J. Gillen then told the court that the jury had completed all matters before it this month. Judge Williams asked John J. Reilly, the foreman, if this was so, and the reply was yes Judge Williams then said, that in view of this fact, the members could be excused until the first Monday in June unless called before that time.

Among his organizations are the K. of C. and Eagles. Rep. Kelley is a member of the committees on mercantile affairs and railroads. He represents the 15th Worcester House district.

CHARGES WASTE TO OFFICIALS

Charges that the selectmen, treasurer and superintendent of streets of Watertown are abusing the power of office and "squandering" money of the taxpayers, are contained in a bill of equity filed today at Middlesex courthouse.

The bill, filed by Atty. Wycliffe Marshall on petition of 20 taxpayers, alleges the selectmen are about to spend money and incur obligations illegally on highway improvement. Four contractors are named who have been chosen to furnish material for construction and maintenance of highway on order of the superintendent of streets.

It is specified that the selectmen accepted the proposal of Thomas J. McHugh to furnish crushed stone, although he is not a bidder. A similar complaint is made concerning Thomas S. d'Onofrio, cement contractor.

The selectmen named are Chairman John P. Barrett, Charles F. Colligan and Edward D. Holland; the superintendent of streets is Pierce P. Condon, and the treasurer is Harry W. Brigham. The bill is returnable in the Supreme court in Boston Friday.

L' LINKED WITH POWER IN BILL HEARING

could contract for power for 99 years?" he asked.

"Yes," replied Barnum, "but if you think we are going to have a board of trustees who are crooks, I suppose you should not pass this bill or any bill."

DIFFER ON POWER

"Oh, no, they don't have to be crooks," was Shattuck's rejoinder. "Lots of mistakes are made by people who are perfectly honest."

"There has been a good deal of difference of opinion as to whether the Elevated should generate or buy its power," said Barnum.

In explaining powers granted to the metropolitan council, comprising mayors and chairmen of selectmen of cities and towns served by the road, Barnum said the council would pass on rentals to be paid for rapid transit extensions and in the event the cost of service exceeds revenue it would decide whether fares should be increased to meet deficits or needed revenue assessed on real estate.

It was brought out that the council also would have authority to pass on sale of the road to a private company. The option clause of the 1918 act, he said, has been changed, since under the present clause with the retirement of the preferred stock, the district might have to pay much more than it would get.

CAN'T BUILD 'EM ALL

In discussing routes for extensions enumerated in the bill, Shattuck brought out that the trustees favor only the first two running from Day sq., East Boston, to the intersection of Huntington ave. and South Huntington ave., and from North Cambridge to Harvard ave. in Brighton.

"Do not the people behind this bill expect to get something?" asked Shattuck.

"I don't know," replied Barnum.

"It seems to me the inclusion of the other routes was to fool someone," Shattuck commented.

Barnum then said the trustees favor in the authorization for the other routes, but do not see how they can be built or carried.

"The trustees see no possibility of building any routes except one and two," he stated.

In answer to a question from Rep. Briggs of Lexington, Barnum said Dedham had been dropped from the bill because town officials were opposed to the town's including.

Shattuck asked who decided if the district was to be enlarged. Barnum said the trustees have the right to build lines and operate buses, after getting location grants.

LAME HUNGER STRIKER WINS HIS NURSE FOR LIFE

She's Seen Europe and Boston

WITNESS TELLS OF WILD PARTIES AT COWAN HOUSE

STATE BOARD RULES CARE IS JUSTLY HIS

George A. Meuse, Brookline cripple, who went on a hunger strike last year to emphasize his claim for a nurse's care for the rest of his life, has, under the state industrial compensation law, won his fight, it was revealed today.

Following a hearing, the state board has ruled that the insurance company must provide Meuse with further medical and incidental expenses.

Two of the five commissioners who sat on the case dissented and filed a minority report. They are Emma Tousant and Charles H. Stiller. The majority members were Joseph A. Parks, Chester E. Gleason and Edward E. Clark.

HAS PAID $14,000.

"The board rules that jurisdiction continues in this unusual case and that the insurer shall continue to pay for medical and incidental expenses," the decision reads.

Several hearings were held by the State board on what is declared to be the most unique case in its history. The Federal Mutual Insurance Company requested that it be relieved of further charges for medical service for Meuse.

Counsel for the company argued it had already paid a total of $14,000, including $9000 for medical, hospital and nursing services; $1000 specific compensation for permanent loss of the use of both legs and $4000 "final payment," to which Meuse was legally entitled under the statutes.

CRIPPLED FOR LIFE

The main point at issue was whether the State board had authority to order continued medical treatment after the legal period for compensation had expired.

The majority opinion was that the case was such an unusual one that the strict interpretation of the statutes was overshadowed by the justice of the crippled man's claim.

The insurance company, it is understood, will appeal to the Superior Court, and, if necessary, to the Supreme Court.

In 1923, during the course of his employment, Meuse fell from a staging and injured his spine to such an extent that his legs were paralyzed. He will never be able to work again, but may live for years.

Wife of Former N. Y. Bank Leader Dies

New York, May 13—Mrs. Frank H. Werder, wife of the former New York state superintendent of banking, died of a heart attack in her Riverside drive apartment.

Dr. Max Reuch, who attended Mrs. Warder, said that she died "from heart failure brought on from great nervous strain."

She was under subpoena as a witness in the Morland Act investigation into her husband's administration of the banking department with reference to the failure of the City Trust Company.

15,000 LYNN FAMILIES HIT BY TARIFF

Families of 15,000 shoe workers in Lynn—and some 200,000 shoe workers in New England at large —face unemployment or a 50 per cent wage cut if the New England shoe industry falls of tariff protection against foreign rivalry.

This was predicted by shoe manufacturers and Mayor Bauer of Lynn, who is leading a fight to have inserted in the tariff regulations some protection against the low-priced European products which threaten the very existence of the New England industry.

Last Saturday another shoe company closed its doors in Lynn. Some 300 employes, skilled in this line, but unfamiliar with other work, are unemployed. This is the 29th shoe concern to go down under foreign competition in the last two years.

The campaign of self-protection became more intense today when contents of a telegram of Congressman A. Piatt Andrew became generally known.

The Congressman reported that at the Ways and Means Committee hearing Saturday there were included restrictions in the tariff measure concerning foreign shoes and by-products.

These mysteriously disappeared between Saturday and Monday, so that the bill now lacks safeguards in which New England is so vitally interested.

LYNN ABOUSED

Seldom have Lynn people been so thoroughly aroused as they are today. Labor trouble, wage disagreements and kindred differences have all disappeared in the face of the loss to the workers of their earning power, and to the factory owners of their business.

Telegrams are being showered upon the President and members of Congress, several of whom have pledged their vigorous support.

U. S. Senator David I. Walsh of Massachusetts has telegraphed his assurance of help, and Governor Allen is lining up with the workers and employers in their struggle.

Political observers predict that this issue is certain to become an absorbing political battle next year if relief is not secured.

Judge Qua of the Lynn court has entered into the spirit of the tariff battle. Today he excused two jurors who are Chamber of Commerce members planning to go to the White House on the shoe tariff errand.

"You may stay a week, two weeks, or as long as necessary to help this cause," the judge informed the men.

FORMER RESIDENT MENACE

At a mass meeting—one which is typical of meetings being held—tanners at Peabody met to name a committee to act. This committee, including C. W. Cass, Erskine D. Lord, John H. O'Callaghan, Patrick J. Donovan and Harry Roberts, sent a telegram to the President.

In this telegram a strenuous protest was made and the hope expressed for immediate relief.

Lynn representatives plan to attend a meeting in Boston Wednesday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock in the office at 166 Essex st. of the New England Shoe & Leather Association. The shoe tariff question will be discussed from all angles, according to President Alfred W. Donovan.

SAYS DIVORCED WIFE WAS SEEN DRINKING

Declaring she saw Mrs. Ethel G. Cowan, former church choir singer, return home at 4 a. m., intoxicated and with a lighted cigarette in her hand, Mrs. Florence Hopkins, who formerly roomed at Mrs. Cowan's house on Lee st., Cambridge, continued her testimony today in Middlesex probate court.

Mrs. Hopkins also testified she saw Mrs. Cowan go out at night sometimes with men and she gave further testimony of "wild parties" at the house, in which men and girls figured.

She is a witness for John W. Cowan, who is seeking to gain custody of three children which were awarded to his wife at the time of the divorce.

NOISY DRINKING PARTY.

"On the Saturday night before Easter, there was a noisy party in Mrs. Cowan's room," said Mrs. Hopkins. "They were all drinking. I looked into the room because I was afraid they would set the house on fire with cigarettes.

"Mrs. Cowan was present and she was the ringleader. There was a woman named May there and another named Ethel and another named Frances. They lived at the house and Ethel roomed with Frances.

"The party lasted till after 12 o'clock. Then Mrs. Cowan went away with the whole crowd. One man volunteered to drive the car.

"Mrs. Cowan came home at 4 o'clock in the morning. I was standing in my doorway and saw her as she came in. She was intoxicated and had a lighted cigarette between her fingers.

"I talked to Mrs. Cowan several times and told her that she was intoxicated. I said, 'You are running a terrible house here. I saw a girl stripped at the party.' Mrs. Cowan said she wasn't intoxicated, wasn't drinking. I said, 'You are, I've seen you drinking.'"

"I WANT TO GET DRUNK"

Cowan, who lives on Fayette st., Cambridge, charges conditions at his former wife's lodging house are demoralizing to the children.

Mrs. Hopkins, cross-examined, denied "peeping," but said on one occasion she looked into Mrs. Cowan's room without knocking, saw Mrs. Cowan drinking and heard her say: "I want to get drunk. Let's go out and get some more liquor."

Previously to this occurrence, she said she heard Mrs. Cowan telephoning somebody and saying, "Come on over. I'm lonesome," after which she sent her daughter, Dorothy, upstairs.

The three children, she admitted, went to Sunday school every week. Another witness, Mrs. Lillian Garvin, testified she and her husband left their four-year-old daughter with Mrs. Cowan every day while they were at work and that the child was well cared for.

Mrs. Garvin told of hearing loud talking by men and women in the house late at night in the room of which she heard Mrs. Cowan shout "Whoopee" several times, but neither saw nor heard husband, who occupied a room on the second floor, ever complained.

Mrs. A. J. Turcott, who vanished Saturday, is anxiously sought by her husband of North Reading. Her four small children have cried for her and bought Mothers' Day flowers for her, but she never returned.

MISSING VET'S WIFE, 3 TOTS IN NEED

In Boston too hard-boiled to help the wife and three babies of a missing shell-shocked veteran to obtain a job and save their home?

This is an appeal which ex-service men have asked the Boston Evening American to make to its readers, in an unusually pathetic case.

This newspaper has been told of the case of an Arlington wife and three youngsters under eight years who face immediate loss of their entire possessions.

Her husband is frequently affected by an uncontrollable desire to travel. This is due to his shell-shocked mind. Today he is missing.

The veteran left his family without funds and facing sale of the home due to a foreclosed second mortgage for about $1000.

The soldier has refused to grant more time. He points out that the wife cannot raise money because she has no relatives and few friends—and because she has been unable to find work.

The wife is 23, a trained credit manager, bookkeeper, typist, clerical worker—willing to do any honest work.

No federal soldier dependent aid funds can be obtained while the veteran is missing.

Anyone desiring to offer employment or other assistance may obtain her name and address from the city editor of the Boston Evening American.

WOULD CHANGE TYPE OF BOYS' EDUCATION

If the rank and file of youth in Massachusetts are to become constructive citizens they must, from now on, have opportunity for technical training of the non-college type.

This was emphasized today by Walter B. Russell, director of Franklin Union, in his annual report at the 21st annual meeting of that organization.

"The function of the college," said Mr. Russell, "is with the relatively small selected group that can give four years beyond high school. The great mass of people do not reach college.

"To the technical institute, organized and equipped to meet this situation, falls the immediate task of providing the trained personnel for positions in productive industry.

"Youth now finds himself unable to go to work in a real industry until he is 16 or older. Both school and industry have combined to raise the age. He often does not see the inside of the industrial plant until he is grown up. He then comes face to face with a scheme of 'production so complicated that he cannot hope to hold down a worthwhile job unless he has technical training."

Third Story Workers Only Firemen Helping Woman

MOTHERS FLAY RATTAN USE IN SCHOOLS

Mothers of Revere were up in arms today over the announced intention of Mayor Andrew J. Cassasses to retain the rattan in the public schools of the city.

Mayor Cassasses first stated his belief in the efficiency of the switch in disciplining school children before the Lynn Rotary Club and later repeated his intention of keeping it in the schools of Revere.

"If a rattan is used on either of my children the school will quickly hear from me," declared Mrs. Alice Sweeney of Winthrop ave., Revere. "It is for the parents and the parents only to decide whether that punishment should be meted out. If a teacher thinks that a child deserves punishing, the teacher should so inform the parents and not take it unto his or her self to inflict it. Many a child has been permanently hurt as a result of the improper thrashing by teachers."

Mrs. Madeline Nigro of Broadway, Revere, who has three children in the schools, was against any use of the rattan. She said:

"The punishment, if necessary, should be given at home, and not in the schools. A teacher does more harm than good by using the switch. There are other and better ways to discipline unruly children."

Mrs. Catherine Starkey of Hichborn st., Revere, declared the rattan ought to be abolished as a relic of barbarism. She said: "It is the worst policy to try and drive a child. You can get more out of them by kindness than by cruelty. By all means abolish the rattan."

BRAVES CLUB IS FINED $1000

The Boston Braves baseball club was fined $1000 in municipal court today after entering a plea of nolo to a charge of violating the corrupt practises act in connection with the Sunday sports referendum last fall.

Asst. Atty.-Gen. Callahan, representing the state, agreed to the plea of nolo, which was offered in behalf of the club by Judge Edward L. Logan, its counsel. Judge Joseph Sheehan imposed the fines.

The specific allegation against the Braves was expending money to influence votes. That against Brusse was filing false statements of a report on a political issue.

The children are Catherine, 6; Paul, 5; Leon, 3, and Joseph, 17 months.

MANY MAY LOSE WAR INSURANCE

Washington, May 13 (AP)—The American Legion today declared that unless Congress acts within two weeks a large number of permanently disabled World War veterans and thousands of widows and orphaned mothers, will be deprived of the benefits under Government insurance policies.

Under existing law proceedings to recover on the $10,000 policies issued during the war must be begun before May 29, next. Senator Walsh of Massachusetts is trying to get Congress to extend for one year the time for filing suits.

'Tin Princess' in Court But Judge Lets Her Off

Hempstead, N. Y., May 13 (INS)—The charming Princess Xenia of Russia with the royal blood of ancient Greece in her veins, was found guilty today of violating the traffic laws of her adopted country—but she did not go to jail.

The royal wife of William B. Leeds, son of the "tin plate king," admitted bewitchingly that she had parked her automobile in front of a driveway near a toy shop.

That was as far back as last January, but she was on the verge of sailing for Europe and didn't wish to be bothered. Could the matter wait until she returned? Justice of the Peace Jones obliged.

Today a symphony in green, Princess Xenia swept into court accompanied by her attorney, Henry A. Uterhart.

Judge Jones entered into the spirit of the occasion.

"The circumstances are extenuating and I shall suspend sentence," he said. "I hope will come here often." He quickly explained he meant Hempstead and not the court.

FALLS IN WELL OF ELEVATOR

FIRE REVEALS HANGED MAN

Bristol, Ct., May 13—In the midst of flames that burned over an area of 60 acres of forest land here, the body of Wilford Poneriau, 21, was found hanging in the branches of a tree.

The gruesome find was made by two members of a crew of volunteers assisting the warden in the battle with the flames. Poneriau, who lived in a boarding house not far from where his body was found, was a roller's helper in a brass mill.

A heavy rain enabled the men to check the flames after a three-hour fight.

British S. S. Line Drops 'Powder Puff Flappers'

London, May 13 (INS)—The White Star and Royal Mail Steam Packet company, two of Britain's greatest shipping concerns, have put a ban on girl workers.

The reason is—"more efficiency."

No longer will the companies' valuable time be wasted while noses are powdered and screen stars discussed. No longer will the attention of clerks and executives be diverted from their work by silk-shod knees, dimpled cheeks and coquettish smiles.

These are the reasons given by officials of the congress for the new order, which has caused no little sensation among the working girls of England's capital. Letters of protest are pouring in on the newspapers, but the companies' officials remain adamant.

"Women do not always make for efficiency in office work," explained one of the White Star officials. "We find that young men of 18 to 25 ar much more conscientious, and do typing and stenography every bit as well as affectatious girls."

SEIZE WIDOW OF M'BRIDE

Dublin, May 13 (AP)—Political activities of Mrs. Maude Gonne McBride, widow of Major John McBride, who was executed in 1916 for his part in the Easter week rebellion, have led to her arrest.

She was detained to face arraignment on charges growing out of a recent speech of protest against the bill to protect jurors from intimidation.

VOSE, 'DEAN OF PIANO MEN,' IS DEAD

Willard A. Vose, known as the "dean of piano manufacturers" in the United States, died at his home, 68 Sewall ave., Brookline, today, following an illness of four weeks.

He was born in Brookline in 1851, the same year in which his father founded the famous piano manufacturing business.

Entering the factory of his father, James Whiting Vose, founder of the Vose & Son Piano Co., Willard Vose at the age of 17 showed a business acumen that developed so rapidly that four years later he took over the reins of the business and financial ends of the company and, through a series of advertising compaigns brought it to resognition through the piano and music world.

BURIAL ON WEDNESDAY.

The funeral will be conducted at 2 o'clock Wednesday from the home. Burial will be in Woodlawn cemetery, Malden.

At the time of the death of his father in January, 1904, Willard A. Vose was general manager of the business and treasurer of the corporation, from which position he succeeded his father as head of the company.

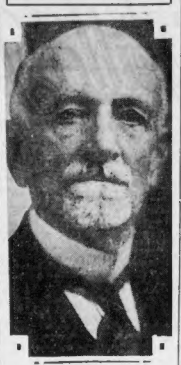
At the age of 21 he was married to Miss Emma Bartlett Perley of Boston. Mr. and Mrs. Vose had two children, George Atherton Vose of Brookline, treasurer of the piano company, and Mrs. Florence Vose Campbell of New York.

TWO BROTHERS SURVIVE

In the course of the expansion of the business and the need of additional facilities, Mr. Vose a few years ago built the new Vose plant at Watertown.

Besides his son and daughter, Mr. Vose is survived by two grandchildren, Virginia Campbell and Atherton C. Vose; also by two brothers, Irving B. and Julian W. Vose.

Died Today at 77



Willard A. Vose, "dean of piano manufacturers," died today at his home in Brookline after a month's illness. He was born here in 1851.

RAPS COUNTRY SCHOOL PLAN

Washington, May 13 (AP)—Dr William J. Cooper, recently appointed head of the United States Bureau of Education, believes that the Little Red Schoolhouse should be relegated as rapidly as possible to things of the past.

Dr. Cooper has nothing in particular against the little red schoolhouse, but he believes that to obtain the best results the educational system should be organized in larger units. In sparsely settled sections of the country, he suggests, it might be necessary to have board and lodging furnished for some of the students.

Mexico Expects Peace in Church Dispute

Mexico City, May 13 (AP)—Feeling is growing in Mexico that a healing of the estrangement between the Roman Catholic Church and the Mexican government will develop from negotiations which the two seem on the verge of beginning.

There has been a noticeable reaction favorable to rapprochement since the statement of Archbishop Ruis of Michoacan at Washington recently and its answer from President Emilo Portes Gil that overtures for co-operation in bettering the Mexican people would not be unwelcomed.

Announcement has been made here that Bishop Antonio Guizar Valencia, of the Chihuahua diocese, has arrived in Rome to confer with the Vatican regarding a settlement.

The bishop was in Washington at the time Archbishop Ruis announced willingness on the part of the church authorities to co-operate with the president in subjects involving Mexico's welfare.

Harvard Leaves Debating League

Because they do not believe that winning is the measure of success in argument, the Harvard University debaters have voted to withdraw from the Eastern Intercollegiate Debating League. According to the officers of the Harvard Debating Council, competing for championships as members of the league puts too high a premium on victory, to the detriment of good speaking and debating.

SAFE ROBBED IN HAVERHILL

Haverhill, May 13—The police today were investigating a $1000 robbery of the safe in the office of Mitchell & Co. on Merrimack st., one of the city's largest department stores.

Royal Clapp the night watchman, notified the police of the robbery and was then held for questioning.

Investigation by Capt. Irving G. Hussey revealed that nearly $1000 had been taken from the safe, which had been opened and not forced, and a considerable sum of money was found on the floor. A search revealed $935 hidden in a can in another part of the building.

Clapp, who is married and the father of six children, has been employed by the company for 8 years.

3 BOYS SEIZED AS ROBBERS

Robbing a synagogue in Cambridge, stealing an automobile and possessing the finest set of burglar tools seen in Cambridge are among charges against a trio of Cambridge boys arrested today.

The boys, all between 14 and 16, confessed taking $2 from a desk in the synagogue. Their only other church loot comprised a few pencils. Their arrest came when a watchman reported a break at a Broadway where the Apostol variety store is located.

Policemen saw three boys running and caught them as they jumped into a car, believed stolen.

In deference to the parents, the American is withholding names of the boys.

RIVER DRAGGED FOR 'CRAZED SUICIDE'

Hanover, N. H., May 13 (INS)—Searching parties today were dragging for the body of William E. Smiley, 60, of Providence, R. I., believed to have committed suicide by slashing his throat with a pocket knife and then jumping in the river, following an accident in which his automobile was wrecked.

Another automobile, carrying a party from Greenfield, Mass., which was following the Smiley car, saw the machine leap high into the air when it struck a fence near an embankment and then turn over. Before they could reach the occupant of the car he had staggered to the riverbank, cut his throat and jumped in, they said.

Smiley, who was survived by a wife and four children, had been visiting friends, with his wife, in West Lebanon.

Shopping with Priscilla Price

Dearest Anne:

The shops are filled with so many alluring things, and your Priscilla has been so happy this week and very busy preparing a shopping tour for two.

We must hurry away because there is much to do, and we want to take an early train out, for you have promised to come home with me so that you may see the moon gleaming down on the forsythia trees and the yellow glow that is all about them like the elusive dream lights of fairies and elves.

Ivy Corsets!

The foundation garments that cling to the figure, moulding it to Fashion's capricious whims! Girlish silhouettes, feminine and alluring, have swept the boyish severity aside. Corsets are the foundation of this new fashion. To wear the new frocks smartly you must be properly moulded for them. For the younger folks the Ivy Girdle and Bandeaux give the slimmer waistline and cut-curved bust and hips.

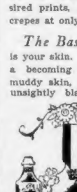
For the larger figure the more persuasive Ivy Corset or all-in-one actually recreates the proportions and reduces with gentle persistency to slender lines. The Ivy Corset Shop, 378 Boylston St., offers a 10 per cent discount all this month on all their garments.

All That's New!

All that's lovely! All that the smartest folks in town are wearing are found at Evelyn's Dress Shop, 8 Winter St.—at extremely modest prices. A gay orange georgette ensemble at transparent velvet trimmed, $14.95. Tweed and kasha ensembles, lined with the gay print of the dress, $15. Soft, fluffy chiffons, with deep bertha collars, dotted crepe ensembles with matching frocks of chiffon. Bridesmaids' gowns in gorgeous hues are $12.95 up. Transparent velvet coats, the popular urge, $13.95. On Evelyn's bargain rack this week are flowered chiffons, the most desired prints, and beautiful flat crepes at only $8.95!

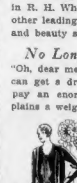
The Base o' Beauty

is your skin. You can't put on a becoming makeup over a muddy skin, enlarged pores or unsightly blackheads and expect to look fresh and lovely. Your first duty is to clear your skin of problem ishes, which yield marvelously to the Swedish Face Bath made by Virozol Co, priced $1.25. It is a revitalizing, rejuvenating tonic cleanser for refining and clearing the skin. The Virozol products are famous throughout Europe and won the Grand Prize in Paris and Belgium for purity and quality. Need I say more? They may be purchased in R. H. White Co. and all the other leading department stores and beauty shops.



No Longer Slender!

"Oh, dear me, Priscilla, I never can get a dress to fit unless I pay an enormous price," complains a weighty friend. That is because she has never been to Lane's, at 26 West St. (2nd floor) — the shop for those who are not slim! They specialize in a group of perfectly stunning frocks at $16.75, in sizes up to 26½ for little women and up to 60 for larger women. Floral prints in well-toned colors, dots and checks. Ensembles with full length coats in the best colors, and smart georgettes of navy and black with lace touches. All youthful lines—excellent material, and priced only $16.75! Their new coats have also been greatly reduced.



A Fur Scarf for Splendor!

You may have the smartest ensemble in town, but it is unfinished if you haven't a soft, silky fur scarf to toss with studied carelessness over your shoulder. You can easily afford one, too, if you go to Scott's, New England's Largest Fur Establishment, where so many are buying from their marvelous selection—one of the largest in town, ranging in price from $15 to $295. They have all sorts of skins, from squirrels to pitch Fox and Marten. You don't need to pay cash, although you may, if you wish. You may open a 30, 60, 90-day charge account, or join Scott's Unique Fur Club the only one in New England and make small weekly or monthly payments while wearing your scarf. If your fur coat needs repairing it is best to have it done now, because Scott's large and efficient workshop is not so rushed as it will be in the Fall, and their prices are at their lowest. Oh-hoo! Come and Play in My Yard!

My small next door neighbor is doing quite a bit of entertaining in his "back yard" since his mother and daddy visited the Beautiful Garden Home of R. H. White Co. and saw what a delightful outdoor playroom a garden makes. And the kiddies have such fun! Healthy and rosy, and already turning a golden tan, they are out all day playing. It's so much better for them than being in the house. They have a Merry-go-round See-saw that twirls 'round and 'round, then rises up to the sky and down to earth again like an aeroplane. It cost $10.00. And a Croquet Set, too. Small size, for the kiddies, which cost $2.50. They are going to get a Sand Box, which they also saw in White's Garden Home. It is quite a good size, filled with shiny white sand, for making the most luscious pies, or building grand castles. It is covered with a gaily striped awning, giving quite a bizarre effect, and protecting little heads against the glaring sun. It is priced $19 complete. And my dear, you should see them flying by on their new Row-Cycle! It is something like a scooter, but is propelled with the arms, which develops strong little chests. All the doctors are recommending them. They are priced $18.50. I wouldn't miss my weekly visit to White's glorious Garden for worlds, Anne. Such color! Such calm! And such Beauty! There is nothing like it in town.

NOTIFICATION CEREMONIES AT HOSPITAL

Between 300 and 400 boys and girls of the Boston American Lindbergh Club attended the "notification" event at the Children's hospital. The occasion was the official notification to the managers of the hospital that the club, in carrying out the wishes of Col. Lindbergh, would purchase a $1000 Wounders' Share in the new contagious ward.

We are sorry that the entire 80,000 boys and girls of our club could not be there to witness the impressive ceremony which marked the presentation of a letter from Edward A. Westfall, publisher of the Boston Evening American, to Gordon Abbott, one of the board of managers of the hospital. Dorothy Pieroway, 11, of 22 Gardner st., Roxbury, made the presentation. The actual presentation of the money will take place at the "Lindy Day" celebration of the club at Parkman bandstand, Boston Common, on the afternoon of May 21. The Boston Evening American will contribute about $200 to the 80,000 pennies to make up the $1000.

Several score of the little inmates of the hospital were brought to the porches of the hospital on their cots by the nurses to watch the ceremony, which took place on the green in the rear of the hospital. They cheered as Dorothy Pieroway presented the letter.

Now, boys of the Boston American Lindbergh Club, send in your photo. The search for the "double" of Frank Darro, juvenile motion picture star, is still on, but it will end at 6 p. m. next Saturday. The boy of our club who most closely resembles this youthful movie star, who is acting in the "The Rainbow Man," now playing at the Washington Street Olympia and the Fenway Theater, will be given a free trip to New York. The lucky boy of our club will make this trip as guest of the management of Publix Theaters of Boston.

Remember send your photo to Boston American Lindbergh Club, 8 Winthrop sq., Boston, or leave it at the Publix Theater in your neighborhood.

Washington Street Olympia, Frank Hoolaklo, manager; Scollay Square Olympia, Larry Beary, manager; Fenway Theater, Massachusetts ave., Al Fowler, jr.; Capitol Theater, Allston, Harvey Cox, manager; Allston Theater, Allston, Charlie Bassin, manager; Central Square Theater, Cambridge, Joseph Goldberg, manager; Harvard Theater, North Cambridge, Joe Callahan, manager; Strand Theater, Dorchester, Jos Dempsey, manager; Codman Square Theater, Dorchester, Al Donovan, manager; Fields Corner Theater, Dorchester, Louis Newman, manager.

Every member of the Boston American Lindbergh Club that can possibly attend should be at the big event to be held Thursday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock on Boston Common, in front of the Parkman Bandstand. Motion pictures of the boys and girls will be taken and will be shown at nine Publix theaters in Boston. Here is a chance for YOU to get in the movies. Eddie Dowling, the Boston musical comedy star, now appearing in the all-talking motion picture, "The Rainbow Man," at the Washington Street Olympia and the Fenway Theater, will address members of our club.

Members who attend also will have the opportunity to witness the annual competition of bands and fife and drum corps conducted by the schools of Boston. There will be plenty of music, so be there.

Motion pictures of the event will be shown later at the following Publix theaters:

Washington Street Olympia, Boston; Scollay Square Olympia, Boston; Fenway Theater, Massachusetts ave., near Boylston st.; Capitol Theater, Allston; Allston Theater; Central Square Theater, Cambridge; Harvard Theater, North Cambridge; Strand Theater, Dorchester; Codman Square Theater, Dorchester; Fields Corner Theater, Dorchester.

Victor Morris, manager of Loew's Orpheum Theater, Washington st., Boston, promised to entertain the 200 boys and girls of the Boston American Lindbergh Club who submit the best essays on "What Lindy Means to Me." He will entertain them with a free visit to his theater on some Saturday morning in June. Then some particularly good show from the viewpoint of children is billed. Morris also added to his offer an agreement to supply these 200 children with refreshments. Now, boys and girls, isn't that fine? Just watch the Boston Evening American every day for more details about this offer.

This is what we will call a "teaser." The Washington Jewelry Co., watchmakers and silversmiths, located at 365 Washington st., Boston, is offering THREE "Lone Eagle" Bulova strap watches which retail at $50.00 each as prizes for events for members of the Boston American Lindbergh Club. Now the full details about the awarding of these watches will appear in the Boston Evening American sometime this week. Watch for them. These are prizes anyone will be proud to own.

Watch the Boston Evening American daily for the events scheduled for Saturday, May 18; Tuesday, May 21—and Saturday, May 25. Three big RED LETTER Days.

HOW TO MAKE PONTOONS

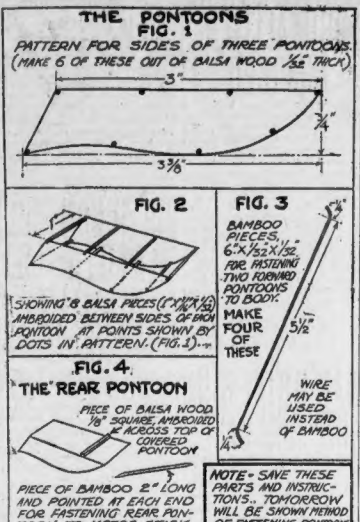

Diagram by Frank J. Tonis, model plane expert, shows amateur aircraft makers how to build pontoons for a hydroplane. Follow these instructions in building your model craft.

Pontoons Important On Hydroplane

By FRANK J. TONIS

Model Airplane Expert of Community Service of Boston, Inc.

To make our ship a hydroplane or R. O. W. (rise off water), we must have a set of light pontoons to support it on the water. We shall use three very light pontoons, made as follows: Cut six balsa sides, like pattern. Have them one-thirty-second of an inch thick or less. See Figure 1.

Now for EACH pontoon you will need 8 pieces of balsa one inch by one-sixteenth inch by one-thirty-second inch. These are embroided between the sides at the points shown by dots on the diagram. The frames are then covered with Jap tissue. THIS MUST BE DONE WITH GREAT CARE. When covered, give the paper and wood sides FIVE COATS OF DOPE. This will make them waterproof. The pontoon should be examined from time to time to see that they are watertight. See figure two.

Split four pieces of bamboo six inches long by one-thirty-second inch square and bend the ends as shown. Bamboo can be bent very easily by holding it at the tip of an electric iron—or over a candle flame—with practice. WIRE MAY BE USED IF DESIRED. These pieces will be used tomorrow to fasten the pontoons to the body—SAVE THEM! See figure three.

Across the top of the pontoon to be used in the rear, embroid a piece of balsa ¼-inch square. (See illustration.) Also cut a piece of bamboo 2 inches long, pointed at each end. This will also be used tomorrow in connecting the rear pontoon to the body. See figure four.

In Tuesday's Boston Evening American will appear instructions for connecting the pontoons and assembling the Indoor Hydroplane.

Any boy or girl who desires to make the hydroplane described by Tonis can obtain complete kits or parts from the Community Service, Inc., of Boston, 739 Boylston st., Room 302. The price of the kit for indoor hydroplane is 75 cents—10 cents extra for mailing. Children who bought the first plane kit should have enough airwind and dope left. If they have the cost of the remainder of the material of hydroplane is 40 cents.

TRIP TO GOTHAM IN STORE FOR LUCKY GIRL

Girls of the Boston American Lindbergh Club—this is for YOU alone.

Do you wish to take a trip to New York with your mother or father or guardian, all expenses paid? Well, such a trip is within reach of every girl in the club as the result of the generous offer made by Publix Theaters of Boston, who will pay all the expenses of the girl who submits the next best essay on "What Lindy Means to Me," after the first 12 winners of trips to Washington have been determined.

In other words, after the judges decide which 12 boys and girls of the club are to go to Washington, as the result of the merit of their essays, they will then pick the next best essay written by a girl, and that girl will take the trip to New York with her mother, father or guardian, to get busy, girls, with your pens and pencils and send in the 50-word or more letter on "What Lindy Means to Me."

While in New York you will stop at one of the best hotels, visit the new Paramount Theater, Brooklyn, take a trip to Coney Island, and all these things will not cost you a penny.

You His Double?

FRANKIE DARRO

The boy of Boston American Lindbergh Club, who most closely resembles this juvenile movie star, will be given free trip to New York. Send in your photos now, boys.

BRITISH SOCIAL BARRIERS ARE VOTED AWAY

Glasgow, May 13 (AP)—British politics is changing. Social values which once set their impress on the House of Commons are disappearing. No longer is it the "best gentlemen's club in Europe."

The older parties are levelling down, the newer parties are levelling up and which ever party wins the great fight it is obvious the next parliament will advance a step further along the road of new social standards.

All the parties have candidates whose affiliations a few years ago would have been regarded as utterly unorthodox. Gwilym Rowlands, an ex-miner, recently succeeded Col. Gretton, a millionaire, as chairman of the National Unionist Association. Rowlands is the conservative candidate in the labor stronghold of Pontypool

Another trade unionist is conservative candidate in Normanton.

Liberals are seeking a constituency for Miss Nancy Stewart-Parnell, a school teacher in a London suburb and a niece of the famous Irish leader of the last century. Two daughters of belted earls, a former domestic servant and an ex-policewoman are among the women candidates for Labor.

The novelist, Sir Hall Caine, has one son running for the Conservatives and another running for Labor.

The front entrance is very attractive, designed with a semi-circular window and a border of quoins.

FROM A "CAPTAIN'S WALK" ON THE ROOF A SUPERB VIEW OF the entire town and of shore line for miles is obtainable, with the Boston Custom House tower on the horizon as a reminder of its designer, Robert S. Peabody, father of the owner of this home. It is on the highest point on Beacon Hill. Piazzas, brick walks, trees, gardens and breezes—an ideal summer home.

Miss Beatrice is to be presented to a group of friends of the family at a luncheon at the Amory home next Sunday.

SOCIETY IS MARKING HER CALENDAR FOR FRIDAY EVENING with Repertory Theater underscored, lest anyone miss the final dance recital of Francesca Braggiotti before she becomes the bride of John Davis Lodge. And for grace and beauty nothing could offer finer examples than are presented in some of society's loveliest daughters disporting as "Atmosphere" for Francesca and Gloria in the gorgeous undersea scene which features the production. Nancy Hallowell, Agnes Boardman, Miriam Winslow, Olive Cousins, Beatrice Allen, Constance Harper, Betty Pope, Eugenia Frothingham, Mary Forbes, Polly Godfrey, Leslie Blake, Margaret Stockton, Jean Ferguson, Hope Blanchard, Patricia Pierce and Mary Elizabeth Sears are among the performers from Boston's elite.

British Photos of Sun Eclipse Equal Those Made in 1927

Alor Star Khad, Malay States, May 13 (AP)—Photographs taken of the eclipse on Thursday by the British observation party have proved better than was expected.

The transparency proved to have been equal to that at Giggleswick, Yorkshire, in the 1927 eclipse and there were several beautiful prominences, one 150,000 miles long and 100,000 miles high with coronal arches.

The apparatus for measuring velocity on the corona was satisfactory.

BOOZE-RUNNING TOURISTS FACE JONES LAW

Washington, May 13 (INS)—All enforcement facilities available to the government were being deployed along the Canadian border today in what was characterized at the Treasury as the most determined campaign yet waged against liquor smugglers.

In the past years tourists have been leniently dealt with by customs inspectors, a nominal fine of $5 a bottle having been assessed.

This year, however, the Jones law which fixes a maximum $10,000 fine and five years in prison for illegal importation of intoxicants may be used against tourists who are caught in the attempt to smuggle liquor.

GIRL ACCUSED IN 'POISON PEN' WRITING

Police of Braintree and postal department inspectors believe that the mystery of the recent "poison pen" death threats against Braintree officials and citizens is solved.

Today Chief John J. Heaney obtained a complaint summons against Eva Libertine, 16 years old, of Quincy ave., East Braintree, charging the girl with being the author of the poison pen letters. She will be arraigned May 24 in juvenile session of the Quincy District Court.

Letters containing threats of death were received by Mrs. George J. Jessup of Hillcrest ave., East Braintree; also by State Police Inspector Edward H. Murtagh and Fire Chief Fred A. Tenney of the Braintree fire department.

Motive for the threats was seen in the fact that the recipients of the letters were witnesses against the Libertine girl's father, who is now serving a jail sentence for arson.

Previously, it was reported that officials had promised that court action would not be taken provided the writer of the letters desisted in her act. According to the police, all the letters were signed "Eva L."

Miss Case, who is a well-known Lynn hairdresser, was driving in Maple st., Middleton, when her car was in collision with another automobile.

Arrested with her was George E. Nichols of Maple ave., Nahant, an auto salesman. State police who made the arrests placed the same charges against him as against Miss Case because, they said, he was technically in charge of the machine while giving another person a lesson.

Antonio Savier, said to be employed as a waiter at an inn in Wrentham, was arrested at the same time for drunkenness. He was in Miss Case's car, according to Troopers Ford and Ahlers of the North Reading barracks of the state police who made the arrests.

They were all taken to Danvers police station and released on bail and will be arraigned later before Judge George B. Sears of Salem Court.

GIRL'S DEATH CASE CLOSED, A MYSTERY

Pawtucket, R. I., May 13 (AP)—Whether Florence Weirbrick, 15, was murdered or committed suicide, probably never will be known.

Coroner George H. Howe of Central Falls attributed death to a "railroad fatality," but said "no one will ever know whether the girl was thrown from the bridge or whether she committed suicide." Her body was found April 6 on the tracks.

Francis E. Wheeler, a junior high school teacher, is serving a three and one-half year prison sentence for leading the girl astray.

Canadian Invents Powerful Explosive

Toronto, Ont., May 13 (AP)—The Mail and Empire today published this dispatch from Kensington, Ont.:

"The secret of a new explosive, said to be more effective than any previously known to science, is being jealously guarded by the Department of National Defense.

"After extensive trials at Petrawawa Camp, artillery officials here refused absolutely to disclose details of the discovery.

"The matter is secret and confidential," they said.

"The trials at the artillery camp were witnessed by experts from the Department of National Defense and experts in the manufacture of explosives.

"The officials absolutely declined to give the name of the new substance, nor would they say to what particular use it might be put. They refused to give the name of the discoverer. It was indicated that it was the work of a Canadian."

WATCH HOME FOR ESCAPED PRISONER

A search extending throughout New England was well under way today for Edward L. Culverhouse of Malden, who vanished from sight after a daring escape from the Dedham jail, where he was serving a term of one year.

Particular watch was being kept in Malden, in the belief that the convict might go to his home there to provide himself with clothing and other necessities before fleeing for other parts of the country.

Railroad stations and shipping points were also under close surveillance.

Culverhouse was sentenced on April 10 by Judge Brown in superior court, having appealed from a conviction in Norwood Court, and been found guilty by a jury. He was charged with larceny of a radio set valued at $127.50 from a radio shop in Norwood. After his arrest warrants were secured for Culverhouse by police of Boston and Malden on other charges, and these warrants were waiting at the jail office to be served upon his release.

SUICIDE SCARE TURNS OUT TO BE BAG THEFT

When Sergt. William Martin of the Charles river basin station, Metropolitan police, was informed today over the telephone that a man had jumped from the West Boston bridge, he scented a suicide attempt.

Hurrying to the designated spot, he discovered a pair of trousers, well inflated, hanging from an abutment and blowing freely in the breeze. There was nothing in the trousers, however, except wind.

Other parts of clothing and some letters nearby furnished a clue by which the mystery was solved. The owner was communicated with and explained that a traveling bag containing some clothes and letters had been stolen from his automobile. The thieves used the bridge to dispose of the unwanted loot.

DRAFTING TEXT OF REPORT ON REPARATIONS

Paris, May 13 (AP)—Dr. Hjalmar Schacht, head of the German reparations delegation, who spent the week-end at Essen, conferring with leading Ruhr valley industrialists and bankers, was back in Paris today and hard at work with Sir Joseph Stamp of Great Britain on the text of the reparations commission's report.

Sir Josiah agreed with the German experts to incorporate in the report a German condition on the suspension of payments of one-half of the protested part of annuities whenever the financial situation in the Reich justified it, and also to the postponement even of the collection of these sums within Germany for the same period.

Another question, however, may provoke discussion with the creditors. The Germans want the payments of annuities beyond 37 years to come solely from the profits of the proposed international bank.

56 STEP HIGH ON THIRD DAY OF DANCE DERBY

New York, May 13 (INS)—Hot tootsies! They're at it again—those dancing marathoners.

Today was the third day of the international dance derby at Madison Sq. Garden, and 56 girls and boys who have entered steppin' high, wide and handsome, haven't started to get tired yet and were kicking the stone floor of the Garden at a great rate.

The goofs' gallery was crowded with spectators. "Ain't we got fun," was the spirit of the occasion. There in the center of the dance floor, atop a 54-foot pole, sat Shipwreck Kelly, the flagpole sitter.

He's going to stay up on his perch until it's over, if it takes to Christmas. Whenever he gets tired of sitting he stands on a disk not much bigger than a dollar.

Correcting dangerous food fads

SUGAR & COMMON SENSE needed in the diet

Medical and scientific men are leading a swing toward sanity in diet.

PUBLIC opinion in the United States in recent years has been swept by numerous nation-wide food fads, most of them ludicrous, many of them harmful. The craze for slimness, exposed as dangerous by physicians, is an example. The fad for omitting sugar from the diet is another.

Alarmed by the dangers of these fads, medical and scientific men are leading a swing toward sanity in diet. Twelve medical specialists and dieticians recently prepared a symposium exposing the dangers to men, women and girls of starvation diets and "reduction treatments," so called, for slimness.

"The most delicate parts of the body are always the ones to suffer first," says one medical specialist. "Keep children and young people well nourished and up to weight," says another.

Medical directors before an eastern tuberculosis conference recently warned of the dangers of under-dieting of young girls. "The most difficult problem," said one of the directors, "facing us in combating tuberculosis among high-school girls, and particularly among the young flappers of today, is the serious habits they practice to retain or acquire a slim and graceful figure. . . . The problem of nutrition is the one we have to face in our treatment of girls of this age. It is at this age that girls are most susceptible to tuberculosis and other diseases."

A research food biologist, at one of the great universities, recently said: "Sugar makes it easier to eat roughage—mineral salts and fruit vitamins. Sugar modifies the fruit acids and makes the fruits even more palatable. It does not injure or change in any way the delicate compounds. At least 90% of constipation is due to a lack of roughage. Eat bran, fruits and vegetables sweetened to taste."

A group of cooking experts, working in New York, recently discovered that the use of sugar makes healthful vegetable dishes delicious to the taste. In every case, the vegetables cooked with little water and correct amount of sugar won unanimously.

Sanity in diet calls for varied foods, tastefully prepared. In addition to milk and milk products, young people and adults should eat a varied diet of cereals, fresh or canned vegetables and fruits, and meats. Sugar makes these healthful foods enjoyable. Remember the satisfying value of tapioca puddings, fruit whips and shortcakes, jams and jellies at a meal. A bit of sweet makes the meal complete. The Sugar Institute, 129 Front Street, New York, N. Y.

BAR STOWAWAY ON ZEPP TRIP TO U. S.

Friedrichshafen, Germany, May 13 (INS)—A young stowaway, who had hoped to be a "passenger" on the Graf Zeppelin on its forthcoming trip to the United States, was discovered in the crew's quarters today. He was ordered off, and Dr. Hugo Eckener, head of the Zeppelin works, declared any stowaway found on the ship would be prosecuted.

When the giantress departs for Lakehurst, N. J., Wednesday she will carry 59 persons, including passengers and crew. There will be no women aboard.

A female gorilla named "Misli," owned to the Chicago zoo, will be carried on the aircraft. The "Misli" will fall the honor of being the first gorilla ever to take a ride in an airship.

Dr. Eckener announced he will probably avoid the short northern route over England on account of bad weather. He probably will choose the southern route either over Bordeaux, the Azores and Bermuda, or above Gibraltar, Madeira and Bermuda.

"We know nothing about any plans to sell the Graf Zeppelin in America," Capt. Lehmann, first officer, said.

LOVE PROOF

Thrilling 6-Day Novel by Noted Author

CHAPTER 1

HARVEY REYNOLDS stood by a window watching Nadia alighting from her roadster.

She strolled into the room. Harvey Reynolds' pride, his affection, grew heavy with a leaden ache

"Sit down, Nadia. I have something to tell you. I'm awfully sorry but the fact is that we're broke. We're bank rupt. I'm ruined financially. Every cent wiped out. The house —everything."

Her eyes clear, level. "Well, don't worry about me, dad. Everything's bound to be all right.

"I'm afraid you don't realize yet what it means, dear. You see, I took to speculating. That's bad for anybody—especially for a banker."

"Everything—at the bank—" She hesitated briefly. "Everything is O. K. at the bank, isn't it?"

Harvey Reynolds lit a cigarette. Oh, I'm not an embezzler," he said. My accounts are straight enough, but Old Kirk knows I've crashed. My usefulness there may terminate very suddenly."

"Cheer up," said Nadia. "What we've got to face, we'll face together."

They heard the telephone. He returned to the room after a brief conversation

"You remember young Steve Kirk?"

The name recalled vaguely to Nadia the son of old Kirk, president of the bank. The boy had never mingled in Nadia's set.

"Steve is coming here to see me."

"Honestly father, I don't know why you're so upset. There isn't anything you haven't told me, is there?"

All at once Harvey Reynolds sank suddenly into a chair. His face went gray.

"Forgive me," he said, hollowly. "I—I'm afraid I've brought disgrace as well as poverty on you, baby."

"Disgrace?" she was incredulous

He nodded. "They've had an auditor on my books for a week. Something went wrong—a shortage—"

A shortage at the bank . . her father . . an embezzler . . . No! A thousand times no! He was no thief, her father. He might have speculated and lost his own money, but that was all

"Who caused the shortage?" she demanded.

"I don't know. All I know is that I didn't. I never touched a penny of the bank's money."

His eyes, as he said it, were straight, indisputably honest. Between these two there could be no doubt of his integrity.

"Someone has been tampering with my accounts," he went on, listlessly. "I've known for weeks a bomb was going to explode. But the crook—whoever he is—has been too smart for me. I think he'll be too smart for the auditor as well and I'm—I'm the goat."

The color was rapidly leaving Nadia's face. "But why—how—"

"My only idea is that someone substituted a whole set of false books, smuggled them in and out, switched them with diabolic cunning. It's almost impossible to prove such a thing, even if it were true."

"But who—"

"I've wracked my brain guessing, child. Wiggins had the best chance, but I can't doubt him. But I knew this was coming—I knew if things broke badly we'd need money. That's why I mortgaged things and played the market with what I raised. I guess I got pretty lucky. And I lost. You see—you see."

Nadia felt herself tighten inwardly. "Well, we'll see it through."

Something of the worry raised from her father's face. "Game girl!" he said appreciatively. "You deserve a better deal than I've given you."

"Don't be foolish. Maybe this Kirk boy is bringing a good news"

"No chance of that, I'm afraid. But we'll soon know."

But the news young Kirk brought was not good

Of the three, the caller, Steve Kirk, showed the most embarrassment.

Nadia studied him with a steadily growing disapproval. He was, she decided, a younger edition of old Kirk, harsh, cold, boorish

"I'd like to speak to you alone Mr. Reynolds."

"I'd like Nadia to hear what you have to say. If you don't mind."

"Just as you prefer, Mr. Reynolds," he said, evenly, "Your books show you are responsible for a shortage of $25,000. The auditors have finished. The directors are now in session, and they ask you to return with me to make an explanation—an honorable, convincing statement—and also, and immediately, full return of the money. Otherwise there will be an arrest—at once."

Nadia Reynolds at that moment knew that she had never before detested a man as she detested Steve Kirk.

"Mr. Kirk!" Her voice was like a whip-lash, and Steve, who had been facing Harvey Reynolds, turned. "My father doesn't have to reply to any such demands. You—you and your father—seem to assume he is a thief. You simply override a whole lifetime of honesty with your low suspicions."

"I'm sorry that is your attitude Miss Reynolds," he stated quietly. "You are not helping your father at all."

Nadia made an effort to control herself. "Will you please go?" she demanded, icily.

"Certainly." He again faced his father. "Coming, Mr. Reynolds?"

"Sorry . . ." The other man's voice was empty. "Afraid there is nothing I can do."

Young Kirk's face, for an instant, was fleetingly regretful.

"Very well." He addressed Nadia directly. "Some day," he

MOB CANADIANS IN U. S. COLLEGE WAR

"Bread Cast Upon Snow" Brings $10,000

CANADIAN 'SPIES' ARE MOBBED

Des Moines, Ia., May 13—Nearly a hundred students of Drake University early today stormed the residence of the Rev. Carl Ganschow, a Lithuanian minister, in a new riotous outbreak in the college "war."

Morris Rose, John F. Dempster and Frank Rose, all of Toronto, Can., had been sheltered in the parsonage since the recent outbreak of feeling on the university campus.

Members of the student body, in not on wreaking vengeance for what they term "the Canadian espionage system," supposed to have been instituted by Miss Edith M. Rebman, secretary of the board of trustees, surprised Rose and Dempster in front of the Ganschow home.

The Canadians fled, the police were called and John Land and James Dunbar, students, were arrested. Rose and Dempster identified them later at the police station as members of the group that threatened them.

The college has been closed since the first outbreak Saturday. Back of the "espionage row" is a long standing clash between "modernists" and "fundamentalists."

Students of the university staged an egg and rock-throwing riot Saturday when members of the board of trustees refused to oust their chairman, T. T. Sunkle, 60, and Miss Rebman, secretary. Both of Toronto.

Today students were planning to spirit Miss Rebman over the border into her native Canada unless she voluntarily quits the university and the United States.

Resentment of students over failure of the trustees to take action on charges that Dr. Shields and Miss Rebman had been registered in the same hotels of various cities of the United States was fanned when reports gained currency on the campus that Miss Rebman had forbade the raising of the American flag on the administration building where the demonstration later took place.

DEATH LAID TO HIT-RUN AUTOIST

The body of a man found with a fractured skull and other injuries on Commonwealth ave., early today was identified as that of Joseph D. Foley, 31, married, father of three children, whose home was 27 Matlock rd., Newton.

Joseph W. Burke of 4 Meredith ave., friend of the family, went to the Newton Hospital an identified the body.

Inspector Good of Newton police has no evidence that would support a theory of foul play. It is the belief that Foley was the victim of a hit and run motorist. Medical Examiner George L. West has completed an autopsy.

Foley was a plumber. He served 18 months overseas in company C, 101st infantry.

Alleged Auto Thief's Condition Improves

The youth whom police of the East Dedham st. station allege stole a coupe owned by Mrs. Eleanor Stark, of Cottage st., Hyde Park, from in front of the Columbia Theatre, on Washington st., Saturday night, and who crashed the car against an Elevated upright at Washington and Groton sts., as the climax of a wild dash through Washington st., in which several cars were grazed, yesterday regained consciousness and identified himself as Walter O'Connell, 18, of 128 East Third st., South Boston. A policeman is still guarding him in City Hospital. Doctors say that he will recover.

Miss Smith Plans Solo Flight to Rome

New York, May 13—Elinor Smith plans to fly alone on her projected airplane trip to Rome this summer.

She will use a single-motored monoplane, and start out on the first transatlantic solo flight ever attempted by a woman.

Elinor now holds the women's solo endurance [illegible] 26 hours.

She will carry no radio. "It would just add weight," she says.

MOTHER OF 3 SOBS OUT RUM GUILT

Spectators in Dorchester District Court wept today when Mrs. Nora Butler of Dorchester ave., mother of three small children, pleaded with Judge Churchill for leniency after admitting she was guilty of manufacturing and exposing liquor for sale.

She told the judge her husband had deserted her, leaving her in care for the children, the oldest of whom is only three. It was for their sake, she said, that she violated the law.

Police Sergt. John McNeeley, who headed the raid on her home, also told the court a pitiable story of her position, and suggested that the end of justice would be met if she were placed on probation.

"Give me a chance for the children's sake," she pleaded, as she hugged her youngest baby to her breast.

Judge Churchill imposed a fine of $50 for each charge, then suspended the lines and placed her on probation.

Mary Kelly of the same address charged with keeping and exposing, was also fined $50 and payment suspended.

Mrs. Coolidge With Her Mother an Hour

Northampton, May 13—Her own mother a patient in Dickinson Hospital, and her son making his own way in the world, Mrs. Calvin Coolidge joined in observance of Mothers Day as a devoted daughter as well as a mother.

Mr. and Mrs. Coolidge were driven to morning services in Edwards Congregational Church. Red or white roses were given to every mother who attended the church in the morning, and Mrs. Coolidge accepted a deep red rose from Mrs. Mabel C. Pelton, church secretary, who was assisting with the distribution of the flowers.

In the afternoon Mrs. Coolidge spent nearly an hour at Dickinson Hospital, where her mother, Mrs. Lemira R. Goodhue, has been gradually failing for more than a year. She brought a quantity of flowers to cheer the aged woman, and other friends also sent flowers.

WILL PAYS HER FOR A HOT MEAL

Tewksbury, May 13—Twenty years ago two hungry and penniless strangers knocked at the door of Mrs. Mary E. Burk of this town and asked for food.

The oldest of the two wore the revered G. A. R. button in the lapel of his coat. The younger was his son. It was Christmas morning, and the homeless plight of the two strangers touched the warm heart of Mrs. Burk.

She not only appeased their hunger, but she gave them spare clothes of her husband and son, and sent them on their way rejoicing.

Today another stranger knocked at Mrs. Burk's door. He was an attorney representing the $2,000,000 estate of Edward Dalton of Los Angeles, one of the two homeless wanderers she had assisted that Christmas morning of 1909.

The attorney informed Mrs. Burk her act of 20 years ago had brought her a reward of $10,000 bequeathed her by the appreciative stranger.

The boy, the younger man, who was Edward Dalton told Mrs. Burk they would never forget her generous treatment. She forgot about them, except to utter an occasional prayer that better days should come to them.

Years passed. The Christmas morning visitors to Tewksbury had prospered, as Mrs. Burk had prayed they should. The older man died and the son's fortune mounted until the $2,000,000 mark was reached.

Then Edward Dalton remembered the kindly woman in Tewksbury, and instituted inquiries. He was informed she was still alive and going about her daily household tasks, occasionally helping other strangers along life's road.

Records he, too, died, the result of injuries in an automobile accident. His will discloses that he had never forgotten his benefactress.

Mrs. Burk is happy over her good fortune because she says it will enable her to help others.

The Women's Guild of St. James Church will hold a whist party, food and fancy work sale, tonight, at the Beech st. bungalow.

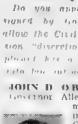
The Curious Quizzer

Charlestown Folk Answer His Daily Question and Pose for Picture

THE QUESTION

Do you approve of the bill signed by Governor Allen to allow the Civil Service Commission "discretion" when applicants have a record of minor auto law infringement?

JOHN D. O'BRIEN, Decatur st. [illegible]



Governor Allen shows his common sense in signing such a bill. Often an automobile driver because of a little carelessness breaks a traffic law. If taken to court by an officer such a law transgressor of traffic rules is liable to a fine. Later, because of having a court record the operator of that motor vehicle may be high on the list for a civil service position. The fact that he broke a traffic law should not then be held against him to the extent of not getting a job.

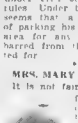
HENRY MOFFITT, Prospect st. Just because a person driving an automobile is responsible for some minor accident is not sufficient cause of his becoming ineligible for work under civil service, in my opinion. And I feel that Governor Allen has done the proper thing in signing a bill to give a man a chance under the circumstances when in line for a job under civil service rules. Under the present laws it seems that a man found guilty of parking his car in a restricted area for any length of time is barred from the work he is fitted for.

* * *

MRS. MARY MURPHY, Vine st. It is not fair to keep any man from work just because he happens to break an insignificant automobile law. I am glad that Governor Allen shows his approval of allowing civil service officials the right to use their discretionary powers in deciding whether the breaking of a law in traffic is of such importance as to nullify his worthiness in getting a civil service position. he has qualified to fill after a competitive examination.



* * *

MISS MAY T. MURPHY, Common st.—Take everything else that Governor Allen does he has done right in signing that bill. I agree with him and he would not be right if he did not approve of allowing civil service commissioners to judge whether the breaking of minor rules in traffic was serious enough to keep a man out of work in the future. If it was a case of drunken driving, or of speeding away after running down a pedestrian, of course that would be another matter. Such a person should not expect leniency from the police, the courts or from the civil service.

Braves Battle Slugging Cubs at Wigwam Today

HORNSBY AND MATES HAVE REAL PUNCH

By NICK FLATLEY

REAL trouble waits for the Braves all along the trail this week. Rogers Hornsby and the other sluggers gathered by Joe McCarthy of the Cubs are present for three ball games. Then the Giants come in for five of the same As the Cubs and Giants are admittedly the strongest contenders for the N. L. pennant, the Tribe can fall into plenty of disaster.

Though the Fuchs athletes have been getting smacked a little too frequently of late, they are still over the .500 mark, and still parked in third place. There is plenty of hope for them, if a pitcher or two can be depended on for steady service in each series

There's not a thing wrong with the team's fielding, and the young men have been hitting the ball hard in spots. For more than a week now they've been handicapped by poor pitching, so results are not a real evidence of the outfit's collective ability

THE Tribal chuckers have been beset by colds. Hardly a one of them escaped the epidemic. But a couple of reasonably warm days chased away most of the sickness, and the sharpshooters should be back doing real business this week.

These Cubs seem to be as powerful an outfit as the National League has scrambled together in quite a while. They have a real punch all along the line, and plenty of home run thumpers—Hornsby, Cuyler, Hack Wilson, Stephenson and Hartnett all are long distance clouters, and several of the other athletes hit 'em high and far on occasion.

The McCarthys have good pitching and plenty of it, and should go on to win the gold and glory if they hold up in the field. Their infield doesn't look like the tightest affair in the world, and when the inner works leak, the ball club usually sinks.

BOSTON fans will be interested, naturally, in watching Hornsby perform. He was manager here a year ago, and while he led the league in hitting, he did not exactly take the town by storm. The Rajah has the sort of temperament that demands success. He is with a winning ball club now, and proceeding to build up a home run record, and a few other things.

Our Braves have had no luck thus far with western teams, dropping two out of three played to the Pirates, Cards and Reds. The boys were outlucked a couple of times, but mostly their pitching was bombarded so fiercely that they never had a chance

The Cubs can hit harder than any club in the league, so the Tribal pitching must improve a lot to banish the slump that killed a lot of spring dreams. Ed Brandt is ready to come back and take his turn, and this will help the team. Ed started off like a million dollars winning a three-run game.

Then the flu grabbed him. He hasn't been able to work at all for the past fortnight but official bulletins have it that he will be in there today. The Cubs are a bad team for southpaws—their star hitters are right hand hitters—but the Fuchs right handers are all used up, so the southpaws will have to try to bring the brigade back to the victory trail

THE Giants, who haven't started any too well come in for three days, starting Thursday. There will be two double headers in that series as the New Yorkers were completely washed out on a previous April visit. The week, all in all, shapes up like a tough test for the Brave pitchers a test incidentally, that could be dispensed with at this particular time

But the Judge and J. Evers refuse to get [illegible] and still think their ball club will get going and raise a lot of ruckus. The pair are tickled to death with the playing of young Earl Clark in center

This kid as was known, is a good fielder and base runner. He has proved his ability in that line. His hitting makes the big impression with the authorities. Earl is way over .300 and showing more ability as he goes along

He was inclined to go after bad balls at first but has shaken that tendency. Now he makes the pitchers get them over and he cracks out more than his share. If he doesn't [illegible] a whole lot of defeats can be forgotten. For acquisition of one real star in a [illegible] is as much as any ball club asks

Judge Fuchs still is dickering for another outfielder but thus far hasn't been able to come to terms. A couple of clubs would like to get Maguire or the Rabbit away from here, but there's nothing doing along that line

Richbourg is back, and that helps the situation some but the club needs one more right hand hitting fly chaser who is by the experimental stage. But it's almost as easy to win a pennant as it is to get a ball player of proved merit, lacking a few million dollars

COMES AS FRIENDLY FOE

Rogers Hornsby isn't leading the National League batsmen yet, but he is on his way, and hopes to add a few points to his average shooting at the Braves Field stands. (International Newsreel photo.)

GLENNA WINS FIRST MATCH, 5 AND 3

St. Andrews, Scotland, May 13 (AP)—Glenna Collett, American titleholder, began her quest for the British women's golf championship with a 5 and 3 victory over Marjorie White of Roehampton, in a first round match today.

Most feared among the four American entrants, Miss Collett played a sterling brand of golf to down her first British opponent in decisive fashion. She took the lead at the first hole and never relinquished it. At the turn she was leading 2 up.

Perfect weather conditions greeted the American champion today in strong contrast to conditions a year ago when cold and rainy weather partially accounted for her defeat in an early round by Mabel Wragg

Miss Collett was first of the Americans to begin the hunt for a title that thus far has eluded the best efforts of the feminine stars the United States has sent over to Great Britain.

George Stallings Dies After Long Illness

in the season when his heart began to trouble him.

He had formerly been owner of the Rochester Club of the International League, and at one time was manager of the New York Yankees Club.

Ball players the country over lay down their bats and gloves and the bounding baseballs come to a stop, for George T. Stallings, former manager of the Braves, is dead.

Stallings was one of the outstanding figures in the national pastime. For more than a generation he had been one of the leaders in the national pastime.

It was as manager of the 1914 Braves that Stallings won the name of "Miracle Man" and established himself as one of the greatest baseball pilots of all time.

Stallings, under the ownership of James E. Gaffney of New York, assumed charge of the Braves in 1913. He took over a tailend outfit, but during his first year as manager he brought the club up to fifth place.

As part of his 1914 program Stallings secured Johnny Evers from the Cubs. Evers had been manager of the Chicago team, but could not agree with Charles W. Murphy, the owner

Evers was installed at second base and was made field leader. Rabbit Maranville, then a youngster, was at short, Red Smith at third and Charley (Butch) Schmidt at first

Rudolph, James, Tyler and Strand were the backbone of the pitching staff, while Hank Gowdy was the club's leading catcher.

During the season, Stallings had 10 to 12 different outfielders. He used left-handed hitters against right-hand pitchers, and right-hand batters against southpaws.

Mann, Connolly, Moran and Gilbert stood out in the outfield

For the first half of the season the Braves met with many reverses and by July were once more lodged in last place.

GREAT PENNANT DRIVE.

Then the team started its sensational pennant drive. Maranville, Evers and Gowdy carried the burden in the field day after day. James, Rudolph and Tyler alternated in the box. It was one of those inspired ball clubs, and it smashed its way through all opposition to the pennant.

The Braves then licked the Athletics in four straight games in the World's Series

Maranville, Gowdy, James, Rudolph, Tyler and the other Braves became famous under Stallings

No matter what reverses the club suffered during its 1914 playing, somebody always came through to offset the loss.

When Evers was called home on account of illness in his family Fitzpatrick dropped in at second and played marvelous baseball

When Red Smith broke a leg just before the opening of the World's Series, Charley Deal stepped in at third base and won one of the series games by his brilliant base running.

FAVORED INTENTIONAL PASS

Stallings was a great believer in the intentional pass. He believed in filling the bases at critical points, as he believed that with the sacks loaded the team on the defense had a decided advantage. He would even order a weak-hitting pitcher passed and risk everything against a heavy hitter in order to prove his theory correct.

The "Miracle Man" also insisted on his players waiting out the opposing pitcher. He would not tolerate a batter swinging at bad balls. He believed one gained a decided advantage when the opposing pitcher knew he would have to get the ball over the plate.

Always a colorful figure of baseball, Stallings never had been given the credit due him until his supreme achievement with the Boston Braves. He was a smart baseball man, both as a player and manager, but in the opportunities that came to him he encountered obstacles that required even more than extraordinary ability to surmount.

His first managerial job in the major league was with the Philadelphia Nationals. A perennial second division club, its owners did not possess the wealth to enable Stallings to build up the team as he wished and he went the way of several other managers who failed to produce a winner out of nothing

In 1909 Stallings became manager of the New York Yankees after a season in which the club, under Clark Griffith and Norman (Kid) Elberfeld, finished last. That year the Yankees finished at the head of the second division. By 1910 he had so rehabilitated the former broken down baseball machine that the Yankees were on the heels of Connie Mack's great Athletics and ended the season as a runner-up to the Mackman.

Baseball experts agreed that the Athletics were the best team in both major leagues, but again Stallings was handicapped by an obstacle that ability and leadership could not overcome—internal dissension. It was said that Hal Chase, who later was dropped from organized baseball as an ineligible, instigated the movement against Stallingss in an attempt to satisfy his own ambitions to become manager. The situation became unbearable to the Georgian who tossed over the managerial reins in disgust as midseason approached.

Manager Stallings was a product of a Georgia farm, where he was born in 1866. It was there he unconsciously developed his throwing arm and gained control by hurling stones at the stumps of trees. He learned the rudiments of the game at Richmond Academy Augusta, Ga., and from the academy team went to his first professional baseball job with the Oakland Club of the Pacific Coast League as catcher. Later he became a player and manager in the old Eastern League, predecessor of the International League. In the latter he had been owner-manager of two clubs, Rochester and Montreal.

LOVE FOR NATIONAL GAME

Remaining with the Braves until 1920, Stallings announced his retirement from baseball. Later, however, he and Walter Hapgood purchased the Rochester club of the International League, which Stallings managed until after the 1927 season. He again announced his retirement, only to return when an opportunity presented itself to get control of the Montreal club. He remained at the head of the club until the middle of the 1928 season, when illness forced his retirement and he was removed to a hospital at Macon, Ga.

Boston baseball leaders were shocked to hear of the death of Stallings. The following are a few expressions of sorrow by some who knew him well:

Bob Quinn, Red Sox president: I am very sorry to hear the passing of George Stallings. I considered him one of the leading baseball men of the country and we can ill afford to lose men of his type.

Henry Gowdy, Braves coach: All the world and the ball players especially will be sorry to hear of the passing of George Stallings. Such a colorful figure and such a personality will not be found again in a long time. He was one of the outstanding baseball managers of our time. I was very sorry to hear the sad news.

BRAE-BURN ON TOP IN W. G. A. TITLE FIGHT

W. G. A. Results

Brae Burn 6, Midland 3.
Northern 6, The Country Club 3.
Southern 5, Central 4.

By BILL GRIMES

The Brae Burn Country Club went into first place in the W. G. A. championship team match race by defeating Midland 6 to 3 today.

At hte start of hte eighth round, Brae Burn, Midland and Central were tied for first, but Brae Burn, alone, won today and took over the undisputed possession of hte top while Midland dropped to second place after leading the race for the title all season.

The Northern district jumped into a tie for second place by defeating The Country Club, 6 to 3, at Winchester, while Southern moved up a peg and at the same time knocked Central down a peg by defeating the champions, 5 to 4, at Dedham.

Although Brae-Burn had a three-match advantage over Midland when the points for the day were totaled, the play was closer than the score indicates.

Mrs. J. D. Woodfin set a fine example for her team by winning a 3-and-3 match from Mrs. F. A. Stanwood. Mrs. Woodfin had a medal round of 96, which was too fast for the Midland leader to hold.

Mrs. G. P. Buell of Midland turned in the best performance of the day. She was 44 to the turn with a deuce on the 6th hole, winning the first eight holes, and she came back in 49 for a 93, winning her match 8 and 7 from Miss Lillian Morrill

With two-thirds of the matches accounted for the score was 3—3, but at this point Brae Burn put on a spurt and took the next three matches, giving them a 6 to 3 victory.

Mrs. R. W. Newell snatched a one-up decision from Mrs. H. H. Ellis on the home green, Mrs. S. E. Bentley administered the first defeat that Miss Bourneuf has suffered this season, winning 2 and 1 while Mrs. Duncan Wright nosed out a 2 and 1 victory over Mrs. W. E. Mackay in spite of the fact the Midland player hold a full mashie shot for a par 5 on the 14th and a machie-niblick for a 4 on the 16th.

British Pros Consider Diegel a Genius

By JOHNNY FARRELL
American Open Golf Champion

Edinburgh, Scotland, May 13—To see ourselves as others see us is to know at once our frailties and our virtues. We of the American golf expeditionary forces, among others, are enjoying the published impressions of "Hen" Cotton, gleaned while he was in the United States last winter.

The young British professional who is ambitious to become the greatest of golfers, observed more than we supposed he had while he was pursuing the pill in the big money events at our United States clubs a few months ago.

Leo Diegel, because of his sensational playing at Moortown, where he struck off a 65 to put Abe Mitchell deep in the ruck, is an extraordinary golfer in the eyes of Cotton. But Cotton is not alone in this opinion. George Duncan has referred to the "Flying Dutchman" repeatedly as the "Golfing genius" because Leo does not follow what is supposed to be the orthodox golfing mode. Diegel has a style distinctly his own and he gets remarkable results with it.

AS COTTON SEES IT

Here are a few excerpts from Cotton's appraisal of Diegel as a man and a golfer:

"He reminds me of Aubrey Boomer in his speech and manner whilst his excitable, emotional temperament is only kept under control by an effort. He is enthusiastic about everything he does, and he is one of the most genuine fellows I have ever met. Leo Diegel climbs on tee boxes to watch his drive finish and, if there is a little intervening hill on the fairway, runs up a bunker face to see how near his shot is going, asks everyone their scores; all these little things are typical of the enthusiasm shown by one of the first four home-bred American golfers. He is always great company and his popularity is universal. He is always ready to play a joke, go out anywhere, and do anything

"To watch Leo Diegel play makes one wonder if style or orthodoxy really count, as he breaks almost every acknowledged principle in every part of his game. He drives with a deep-faced driver off a ridiculously high tee and hits all his drives a very long way, with a high hooked flight. He starts his back swing by shutting his club face, and he holds the face of the club shut until he gets near the ball again, and then he contrives to hold the face open whilst the club hits the ball

"All his iron shots are played in a similar manner and with rather a longish swing. Everybody tries to discover how the ball goes so long and straight so consistently, but it is most puzzling.

"Diegel's putting stroke is perhaps more extraordinary than his swing, but it yields good results. All the boys like to get an old Diegel putter as he is quite an expert in 'messing putter blades and shafts about' in order to make them work well.

RESPECTS GOLF FATHERS

"Like all the other American boys, as soon as you go near him, he looks all through your clubs to see if there is one that he can 'borrow, beg, steal or exchange' as the boys in America seldom have a set of clubs more than a few days. In fact, I have been told that some of them seldom use the same identical set for more than one tournament, as they always alter something or other.

"Diegel is anxious to play with our old masters since, like all the boys in America, he has a respect for the fathers of our professional golf."

RED SOX OPEN IN CHICAGO

Chicago, May 13—Bill Carrigan has not yet decided the makeup of his Boston Red Sox. Third base is open, as well as two positions in the outfield, while Hay Rhyne's weak hitting also is something that is adding new gray hairs on Carrigan's head

An improvement in hitting is Carrigan's chief aim. He has some promising young pitchers, but more than one game has been lost this season because the man at the plate has failed to deliver a hit in the pinch.

Jack Rothrock, who played many positions for the Red Sox last season, appears to be the best card in Carrigan's deck. This youngster turned several sparkling catches in the series with the Browns in St. Louis and probably will do the same against the White Sox in the engagement starting today.

Rothrock fits the bill in center and Bigelow has the moves of a fellow who will hit numerous extra base hits. The infield is exceptionally light offensively.

Carrigan does not deplore his plight but moves on daily with confidence of the season getting better for himself and his team

The Senators and Indians have not entirely outclassed the Red Sox on the season's play so far and Carrigan has an idea that if he can find a new punch he will be a legitimate entry for something higher than the cellar.

But the Sox didn't look that way in the last St. Louis game. Every conceivable bad play, in or out of the record books, was trotted out for the benefit of a small crowd that witnessed a 15-to-3 victory for the Browns.

The Missourians combed 18 safe blows at odd moments during the contest and did considerable scoring on the seven boots turned in by the Red Sox. Hal Rhyne was the chief offender with two costly errors in the first inning while the Browns were piling up seven runs

Maranville Speaks to the Newsboys

Walter "Rabbit" Maranville, Braves shortstop, made an unexpected visit to the Burroughs' Newsboys Foundation, where 700 newsboys from cities and towns outside of Boston were enjoying a Dutch supper as the guest of Judge Fuchs.

Maranville was escorted to the Foundation auditorium by Field Secretary Keevin. The snappy Braves star was introduced to the "newsies" as one of the "boys." Rabbit sold newspapers as a kid in Springfield.

Maranville was given a fine reception by the newsboys and then gave a short talk. He promised the youngsters that he would drop in at the Foundation on a future date.

Paulino Favored to Win Over German

By DAVIS J. WALSH,

New York, May 13—Max Schmeling still may have more managers than a chain-store system when he has fulfilled certain obligations here in connection with Paulino on the night of June 27.

But, by that time, he won't need managers. He will need sympathy.

This, in a slightly more repressed measure, was Jack Dempsey's general opinion today of the fight that is to lead to the heavyweight championship, via a September engagement with Sharkey.

The old champion wasn't quite as emphatic as the above paragraph might make him appear to have been, but, nevertheless, he left no doubt of his belief that his German double would be well veneered on the evening in question.

Schmeling signed for the Paulino shot on Saturday in Montreal and thereby prepared the way for the elimination of two men from further consideration. One of these will be the loser of the fight he signed for. The other is Dempsey himself.

The signing of that contract definitely closed the door against Dempsey's return to the ring. He will not fight again and the reason he won't is that Schmeling is the man whom he has chosen as his own. Now that Paulino has got him, Dempsey will not be interested further. They have taken his lollypop away from him.

He doesn't admit that this is true. He doesn't have to, for the fact of the matter is that it is true. For publication, John's story is the same old tale—maybe he will and maybe he won't.

There isn't any maybe about it this time. He won't and you can go and bet your grandfather's spending money on it.

Anyhow, he says, Schmeling isn't the man to lick Paulino and he tells you why in a plausible way. As John sees it, Schmeling can't hope to pop the other gent with a right hand and that, of course, is the only kind of popping he can do with any degree of authority.

"Schmeling is a one-punch fighter," said he. "His right hand can't score against Paulino's crossed-arm defense and his left means nothing. Therefore, I can't see where he is going to do himself much good.

"It might be different if he was a body puncher. But he isn't. He just shoots that right from a distance and the only place you can hit Paulino that way is on top of the head. I think the Basque is a push-in for that fight."

Maloney and Bertazollo Fit For Bout at Garden

FULLER IN BANGOR TUSSLE

North End Featherweight Takes in Battling Sandrella in Go Tonight

By JACK CONWAY

JIM MALONEY will sweep back into action on Friday night when he clashes with Ricardo Bertazollo in a 10-round bout at the Boston Garden. It will be Shamus' first local start since he walloped Tom Heeney. Since then Jim scored a technical knockout over Con O'Kelley in New York.

Maloney is entrenched at Wanamit and Jere Gardner is sure to have him in the best possible condition for his tussle with the Italian heavyweight.

Jack Conway

There is unusual interest in the appearance of the giant Bertazollo. For six weeks Frank Marlow has had his new protege at Sharon Gardens. The Italian champion has the assistance of Doc Bagley as trainer, while he has a regiment of sparring partners and rubbers.

No champion preparing for a defense of his title ever had better training facilities than Bertazollo. The big fellow has shown good form in his workouts and feels sure he will lick Maloney. There isn't any secret of the fact the Italian heavyweight intends to do his heavy shooting for Jim's chin in an effort to win by a knockout.

The winner of the Garden bout will be signed to clash with Johnny Tusko in a ten-round setto at Braves Field on June 10.

The semifinal of eight rounds between Jack Gagnon and Al Friedman should also be replete with thrills.

SAMMY FULLER, North End featherweight, will start a new little drive when he collides with Battling Sandrella in two six-round bouts at Bangor, Maine, tonight. Fuller is down to 130 pounds and is of the opinion he will come through with a victory.

Vic Richardson is interested in the boxing game in Bangor. Vic was connected with the Armory A. A. in this city several years ago. He is a keen student of boxing and should furnish some good talent for the shows at Bangor.

NEW ENGLAND boxers continue to run into difficulty when battling away from home. The knockout of Honeyboy Finnegan by Armando Santiago at Chicago was one of the big boxing upsets of the year. Honeyboy was to have been matched with either Tony Canzoneri or Andrea Routis in the event he won over Santiago.

The Cuban was looked upon as a setup, as he had previously flattened Joey Sanger, who is a very good fighting man.

Frank Churchill, who managed the late Pancho Villa, is piloting Santiago. As Churchill is also manager of Tod Morgan, he has two sturdy fighting men under his banner.

THE new boxing club at the Revere Cycle Track, which will operate on Thursday nights during the summer months, will furnish New England boxers with an opportunity to perform. Matchmaker Lou Penny says he will feature the local mitt flingers.

With the Boston Garden operating at Braves Field, the Arena Club at Fenway Park and the Cycle Club on the job at Revere, boxers and fans will have plenty to occupy their attention.

There are many opportunities for fighters who fight.

BIG BOY RAWSON and Bob Mills are expected to be signed by the Arena Club for its opening boxing show at Fenway Park on June 6. This tussle is a natural and will draw a large crowd.

Women's Tennis at Longwood

The annual women's spring handicap singles tennis tournament got underway today at the Longwood Cricket Club at Chestnut Hill. The entry list contains the names of 24 of the most prominent players in the State and should result in one of the best spring tournaments of the year.

Jersey Irish Turn Out Another Real Fighter in Ridgeway

By DAMON RUNYON

Copyright, 1929, by Universal Service, Inc.

NEW YORK, May 13—It looks as if the Jersey Irish, those wild tribes that dwell above and beyond the salt meadows, have produced another little fighter. His name is Al Ridgeway. He lives in Union City, which is a place just across the dreamy North river from the Roaring Forties, and also a place where the vaudeville actors hate to go. I don't know why. I have passed through Union City. It seems a pleasant place.

It stands on the cliffs high above the sprawling river, and almost any Union Cityite can peek out of his front window and get a large load of Manhattan Isle, by day, or by night. The night load isn't at all bad, especially if a Union Cityite has a pair of powerful field glasses, and the visibility be okay, as many of our best hotels and apartment houses are in easy view.

I am told that Al Ridgeway's paw is chief of the Union City fire department, and the recent night the Jersey Shamrock appeared in Madison Square Garden to startle the millionaires, it was perhaps just as well that there wasn't a conflagration in Union City. But everything even itself up in this life. If Madison Square Garden had caught fire, the blaze wouldn't have had a chance.

THE Jersey Irish are always turning out fighters.

Clarence Mickey Walker, the middleweight champion of all this world is indubitably Irish, and Jersey Irish, at that. He comes from Elizabeth, that lovely little city which is also the home of Georgie Ward, and was formerly the home of Ernie Schaaf, the sailor boy.

AL RIDGEWAY, the Jersey Shamrock, com s of the s rn stuff of which the true Jersey Irish are made. He bids fair, as I say in the lounge, to succeed to the fistic affection that the Jersey Irish had for Frankie Burns, the Jersey Skeeter, a gallant little gladiator of another day beyond the Hudson tubes.

Ridgeway weighed 132 pounds for the fight that made his Manhattan reputation recently, which was with a brother member of the Jersey Irish, called Irish Bobby Brady. You might expect a bond of sympathy, or something, between a brace of Jersey Irish, but it seems Irish Bobby comes from Jersey City, and it is legal in Jersey for inmates of Union City to throw brickbats at inmates of Jersey City, and vice versa.

Anyway, these young Jersey guys fought as if they hated each other very bitterly indeed, with a large throng of infuriated Jerseyites egging them on. Ridgeway won on a foul in the second round, leaving the trouble incompleted.

RIDGEWAY is a narrow built, black-haired, pug nosed little fellow, who looks like Eddie Frayne, the sports writer. He is the boxer-fighter type. I mean Ridgeway, not Frayne. The latter is strictly a boxer.

Ridgeway is the first youngster who has appeared in quite a spell who acts as if he knew a little something of the finer points of what Tunney calls the dignified profession. He has a lil of a left hand, and is a cracking good puncher with his right. He is reminiscent of Johnny Kilbane, when Kilbane was Kilbane, and not the gray haired old gentleman who sat on the floor looking up at Criqui of France and laughing heartily.

Ridgeway came to town as a preliminary fighter, but it develops that he has been schooled for three years by Harry Lenny and has had nearly 50 battles. Most of his fighting was done in Jersey. He has been defeated but once, which makes him a sort of Tunney of the little fellows.

PERHAPS the fact that Lenny failed to rave about Ridgeway with his usual virulence of raving over his fighters, was a throw-off to the ringworms.

The bald-beaned Lenny usually makes such a racket about his gladiators that a guy can scarcely hear himself think. And sometimes, remarkable as it may seem, the gladiator cannot seem to gladiate up to Lenny's roar.

Irish Bobby had shown here several times, with old Joe Jeannette, one of the greatest of the negro battlers of a generation back, in his corner, and had established himself as a hitter. The ringworms made him 2 to 1 over Ridgeway, and the foul saved much wampum to our islanders.

THIS Ridgeway is apt to go far.

He will be a lightweight soon and perhaps a contender for Sammy Mandell's uncertain crown. The Jersey Shamrock is a real fighter. He knows how to fight. He likes to fight.

M'TIGUE IS BACK IN RING AFTER RETIREMENT

New York, May 13 (AP)—At 36, bold Michael McTigue, former light heavyweight champion, returns to the ring tonight after a retirement of nearly a year.

The Irishman, who twice held the 175-pound crown, hung up his gloves apparently for good after his one-round knockout by Tuffy Griffiths last September.

Now he is booked to fight Paul Hoffman of Holland in the semi-final bout at the St. Nicholas Arena tonight.

GOOD FIGHTS FRIDAY.

The week's national boxing card offers little in the way of extreme excitement although Friday night shows in New York, Boston and Detroit may provide some thrills.

At New York's Madison Square Garden, Al Singer, shifty junior lightweight from the East Side, engages Ignacio Fernandez of the Philippines in a ten-round match. Gorilla Jones, Akron negro and recent conqueror of Al Mello, battles Izzy Grove, East Side welterweight.

At Detroit, Andre Routis, beaten by Tony Canzoneri at Chicago last week, will tackle a comparative unknown, Bernard Roger of Flint, Mich., in a ten-round bout. Routis' featherweight title will not be at stake.

MALONEY TESTED.

Jimmy Maloney, heavyweight contender, and Riccardo Bertazollo of Italy are the headliners of the Boston Garden's card, with Al Friedman and Jack Gagnon, rival Boston heavyweights, clashing in the semi-final.

Dorchester Wins in Ninth Inning

Dorchester Twi team won its opening game at Dorchester, defeating the J. A. Cigar team, 5 to 4, in a ninth-inning rally.

MR. BOSTON

by JACK CONWAY

"IF I were asked to tell where my residence is I would say it was aboard a Pullman car somewhere in America," Gus Sonnenberg jokingly told Mr Boston today. "Since I won the world's heavyweight wrestling title from Strangler Lewis, I have looped around the country with the same carefree manner that the ordinary youngster takes a pony ride.

"During this time, I have engaged in almost 25 bouts. I have taken some tough slams, but somehow have managed to come through with victories. That's what counts in wrestling and in other sports.

"I'm once more back in Boston and am tickled at the thought of remaining here for some time. But I cannot go on a vacation yet as I'm booked to tackle Joe DeVito in a finish bout at the Boston Arena on Thursday night.

"When DeVito licked Stanley Zbyszko, Farmer George McLeod and Stanley Stasiak, there were some people who claimed I would sidestep the Italian. They were not fair to me as I have yet to dodge a legitimate challenger. I readily consented to tackle DeVito and am confident I shall defeat him.

"When I clean up all outstanding challenges I want to take a lay off and have some fun. I have been so busy since winning the title that I have hardly had time to change my collar. But as I have cleaned up $100,000 I have not any reason to register a complaint. A year ago last fall, I thought I was doing well when I earned $50 a week. I am now averaging $4000 a week.

"If I had remained teaching school, I wouldn't have got that much in a year. Educators are certainly under paid. The public is more interested in my flying tackle than they would be in a lecture on chemistry. You know it was chemistry that I used to teach.'

"THERE are a great many good chemistry teachers," remarked Mr. Boston, "while you are the only mat star who can tip them all over with a flying tackle. You are getting the big money because you can do something which nobody else can do.

"There is big money in any line if you can do something better than anybody else."

"I suppose you're right," answered Sonny, "but I cannot help but feel sorry for school teachers who are getting from $1500 to $5000 a year after years spent in preparation for their work. I get a thrill out of being heavyweight wrestling champion and receiving big purses, but my heart is still with the fellow who is teaching chemistry, English, math and the other things in the little red school house in the hills.

"Then there are the preachers. They are much under paid. They are using flying tackles on the devil every day. It probably pays better dividends in this world to pin a Strangler Lewis to the mat than it does to toss satan.

"ALL this probably hasn't got anything to do with my bout with DeVito on Thursday night, but it was on my mind and now I feel better that I have aired my views. I don't care how tough DeVito is. To me, he is just another wrestler. I'll give everything I have in the way of mat work and I believe I shall win."

BRUINS BUY THREE FLYING FRENCHMEN

The Boston Bruins today announced the purchase of Herb Gardiner, defense man; Art Gagne, wing, and George Paterson, wing, from Les Canadiens of Montreal.

This trade gives the Bruins a total of 23 players.

Tech Eight to Race at Poughkeepsie

A Technology crew will compete in the classic Poughkeepsie regatta for the first time since that rowing event started in 1895 when it rows, June 24, over the four-mile stretch on the Hudson river.

The M. I. T. athletic council forwarded to the Intercollegiate Rowing Association its acceptance of the invitation it received in January to race at Poughkeepsie.

Lafayette Nine Yet to Be Beaten

Easton, Pa., May 13—When Lafayette meets Lehigh today in the second game of a three-game series with its traditional rivals, it enters the game with a record unparalleled in the 64 years of baseball history at Lafayette. With nine victories to its credit in an undefeated season Lafayette leads all colleges of the East.

In 1925, the first year which Bill Cochlin, former Detroit Tiger captain, coached the team, Lafayette had a winning streak of 13 wins. A total of three games were lost that season.

Everett Fans Clamor for New Field House for Teams

THINK BOY ATHLETES SLIGHTED

By DICK McSWEENEY

Everett fans, reading about the new field house which is soon to be built by Medford high school, are wondering why their own high school athletes should not have a modern building.

The present structure which serves as a field house at Everett high school has long outlived its usefulness. Its shabby appearance and lack of modern equipment certainly does not encourage visiting teams to undertake their trips to Everett.

Teams at Everett have always been strong because the youth of that city has had the right sort of spirit and also has had sufficient coaching, but it is foolish to expect continued athletic success in the high school if nothing is done in the matter of providing the boys with a clean and modern structure which will take care of all their needs.

As a matter of civic pride the people of Everett should want to have it said that their athletes have a field house which is at least on par with those of such schools as Somerville and Brockton.

Citizens of Everett are aroused to the need of a new field house, but as yet no action has been taken by those who control the city purse strings.

Another matter which puzzled Everett fans was the leasing of the high school athletic field to the Boston Pro Soccer Club for soccer games, and the use of the field from February until last Saturday. As a result the high school baseball team had to play its Saturday contests on Glendale Park, a public playground. It was not an unusual sight to see athletic teams playing in this park while the Everett nine was in action.

Andover's victory in the Harvard interscholastic meet only goes to prove that the right system of mind is the most valuable asset a team can possess. The Blue athletes realized that they must uphold the track prestige of their school gained by eight consecutive triumphs since 1921. They faced the strongest sort of opposition in Class A and came through.

There are some fine baseball games on this week's scholastic diamond schedule. That Somerville-Rindge tussle at Cambridge on Wednesday promises to be one of the high-lights of the week. Somerville appears to have a slight edge on the Cambridge nine in the pitching department but the Rindge boys can slug.

Another Wednesday conflict which is sure to bring the fans to Everett is the Medford-Everett mixup. Gildea's team has excellent pitchers in Di Angelo and Ward. Di Angelo has a great drop and can toss curves. He would benefit with a little more control though. Ward has a nifty fast ball and is working to gain a change of pace.

Newton and Brookline stage their spring dual meet on Wednesday at Newton. This meet should be one of the best ever held between the two rivals.

SONNENBERG IN HUB TO MEET DE VITO

Gus Sonnenburg, heavyweight champion of the wrestling world, is in Boston for his finish match with Joe DeVito, Italian sensation from Providence, R. I., to be held at the Arena Thursday night.

Gus has just concluded another spectacular tour through the Middle and Southwest, meeting all comers and cracking all records on his great tour. Already in razor edge condition from his steady wrestling, the most colorful wrestler in all history will work lightly at Kelley & Hayes' Gymnasium tomorrow and Wednesday at one o'clock

DeVito is no lyro. He knows all the tricks of the game. His youth is seasoned by plenty of hard-won experience. And he is at the peak of a winning surge. In the past five weeks, he has careened over Stanley Pinto, Bohemian champion; Stanislaus Zbyszko, former heavyweight champion of the world; Farmer George McLeod, the California comet; and Stanley Stasiak, the rough-and-tumble Athlet.

His victories must mean something. They must mean that a new star is buming brightly on the horizon, and that a new challenger has risen to disturb the waking and sleeping hours of Sonnenberg. The manner in which he accomplished his victories have left no question of his superiority to McLeod and Stasiak and the other near greats, and thousands of Italians will be on hand Thursday night to cheer their countryman to the first world's title ever held by an Italian wrestler.

Marin Plestina, the famous "trust buster," and one of the greatest wrestlers in the world, has been signed to appear in the semifinal match. His opponent will be named tomorrow, but Joe Savoldi, rubbing for Paul Boyan, announced yesterday that the match is the strongest semifinal ever arranged for a Boston show.

VILLANOVA ON B. C. COURTS

Two tennis matches are slated for the Boston College netmen this week. Villanova will visit the Heights courts on Thursday afternoon and the Eagles will carry their racquets to Burlington on Saturday to meet the University of Vermont.

The B. C. team has lost both its matches this spring. Tufts and Springfield have both set back the Eagles. Capt. Frank Hegarty believes that his team will do better when it is able to get in more practice.

Frank Broughton, Vin Roberts and George O'Connell have been representing the Maroon and Gold and all are playing good teams.

Woburn Soccer Team in Finals

Woburn Tanners defeated Revere Corinthians, 5 to 1, at Blake field, East Cambridge, to enter the State Charity cup final.

Charley Travers, shifty assisted by Jack Wallister, scored three of the goals. His brother, Martin, and Charley Watson, got the others. Green was responsible for the Beach city club's lone tally.

Eastern Colleges Form 'Middle Three'

New Brunswick, May 13 (INS)—A new athletic triumvirate of Eastern colleges has been formed here by representatives of Rutgers, Lehigh and Lafayette, traditional rivals.

The association will be known as "The Middle Three."

B. C. NINE GOES NORTH TO PLAY DARTMOUTH

By JOHN B. GILLOOLY

Hanover's famous hills should see one of the best college diamonds wars of the spring when Boston College and Dartmouth, rated among the best nines in the East, clash tomorrow afternoon.

Dartmouth has gone through its last seven games without a setback. Boston College hasn't been subdued since it lost to Georgetown in the second game of the southern trip. The Eagles have won eight straight.

The Green, for some reason or other, seems to have a slight edge in tomorrow's game. It may be because it is being played at Hanover, where Boston Colleges has been jinxed in the past two seasons.

Gunnar Hollstrom, who has won six in a row for Jeff Tesreau, will do the twirling for Dartmouth. Facing him on the B. C. mound will be Jim O'Connor, who was marked with the one and only B. C. loss against Georgetown.

Hollstrom worked last Friday and whipped a Penn nine that hadn't tasted defeat for 11 successive pastimes. Hollstrom held the army of Red and Blue sluggers to six scattered hits.

On Saturday Dartmouth defeated an old rival, Columbia, and Coach Tesreau saw another member of his pitching staff, Myllykangas, come through in grand style by allowing the Lions four hits.

On the same two days Boston College hung up two unimpressive victories. Springfield, a team which B. C. walloped by 17 to 2 earlier in the spring, rallied to keep the Eagles to a 3-to-2 win. Dixon pitched his first game for B. C. and Colberg and Regan, two .500 hitters, were out of the lineup.

This might have been the reason for the poor showing of Coach Hugh Duffy's boys. Then B. C. went to Durham and licked New Hampshire by a score of 9 to 4.

Coach Hugh Duffy has seen his club swing up with the leading teams against easy opponents. His club, right now, is up with the topnotchers. But whether it can step up there against classier opposition will probably be answered by the Green.

The Eagles will go to Hanover with two out of the lineup. George Colbert, the heavy hitting catcher, is still unable to play. Duffy was considering using him against Dartmouth, for he wants to win this game, and take a chance of Colbert furthering the injury to his knee.

Frank Regan, another hard hitter who covers right field, is definitely out. Regan tore a fibula in his leg against William & Mary and won't be back until the Fordham game on June 25th of this month at New York.

B. C. Frosh Meets B. U. Yearling

The Boston College freshman baseball nine will play but one game this week, staging a return battle with the Boston College frosh tomorrow afternoon at Riverside.

The first meeting of the yearling Hub rivals turned out to be a one-sided affair for Boston College. The Eaglets won by a score of 10 to 1. Mannix, who buried, held the Pioneers in control at all stages.

The B. C. freshmen have defeated B. C. High, St. John's Prep and B. U. '32 and dropped one game to St. Anselms.

Frank McCrehan, B. C. coach, has a fairly good nine that can give any freshman team hereabouts a hard struggle

CHICAGO—Scarface Al Capone is said to be stone broke. He is having difficulty meeting notes and is in danger of losing his beautiful Florida home, on which he owes $30,000.

This is one of the most pathetic cases that has come to the attention of this department in months.

Something should—and will—be done about it.

Why not a national Tag Day?

This department will be glad to receive donations for Mr. Capone —canned fruit, old spats, walking sticks, etc.

Or perhaps you have an old machine gun or an unexploded bomb around the house. Send it to the Capone Relief Fund.

JOHN SNIP CERTAINLY MADE A MONKEY OF HIS BROTHER (Lamar, Mo., Democrat)

John Snip may go to Hollywood one of these days to star in the movies.

Thursday afternoon he got a cane, borrowed a derby, humped himself over, twisted his face and, holding out a buttered cup for alms, in a pseudo trembling hand, he bobbed into the Lamar Trust Company. At the front window stood President Casey Snip, who knows John fairly well, as they're both brothers. Casey was filling up a deposit for Frank Longnecker. Casey dropped a dime in the extended cup.

Mrs. Casey Snip, who must have seen John quite frequently, being his sister-in-law, said the sight of such an unfortunate simply made her sick.

When John had crept back to the door to straightened up, unscrewed his face, removed his derby with a flourish and with his best bow said, "I thank you, gentlemen!" Right then the crowd in the bank would have swapped themselves for a mashed dime.

BIG GAINS MADE BY INSURANCE STOCKS

Fire insurance company stocks, which have shown exceptionally marked appreciation in value in recent years, have come into general favor with that class of the investing public specializing in "long pull" securities, according to W. Wallace Lyon & Co., 51 E. 42nd st., New York.

The average annual gain to stockholders of ten of the leading fire insurance companies was equal to approximately 66 per cent per year for the ten-year period 1918-1928, data compiled by the company shows. The figures covering these ten companies are as follows:—

Alliance Insurance Co	*35.9%
Boston Insurance Co.	34.9%
Continental Insurance Co.....	43.5%
Fidelity-Phenix Insurance Co	77.7%
Globe Rutgers Fire Insurance Co	195.9%
Hanover Fire Insurance Co	76.0%
Insurance Company of No. America	47.5%
Niagara Fire Insurance Co	53.2%
Providence-Washington Insurance Co	99.3%
Security Insurance Co	42.5%
Average	66%

*Average annual return in dividends and market appreciation

An important factor in the growth of the business of fire insurance companies during this period has been the enormous increase in the sale of automobiles on the time-payment plan. Fire insurance on all cars sold on the deferred payment plan is made mandatory by the finance companies handling this business.

BROKERS' LOAN ATTACK SENDS MARKET OFF

By W. S. COUSINS.

New York, May 13—A break in the motor stocks, following closely the circulation of rumors of a heavy overproduction of motor cars, upset the industrial stock market today and prices of the speculative leaders fell 2 to 6 points.

Uneasiness over the money situation, induced by another experts' committee attack on brokers' loans, held back bullish buying of the well-known stock, and bears were ready to take advantage of this situation in their efforts to hammer down prices.

Chrysler's weakness continued, and the stock was forced down over 6 points to 80¾, completing a loss of 12 points from the high of last week.

General Motors dipped to around 80, the lowest price in more than a month, and losses of 1 to 3 points were recorded in Nash, Hudson, Marmon, Packard, Overland and Studebaker.

The heaviest losses were recorded in the high-priced specialties which have been head and front of the forward move in recent weeks.

The Bears took advantage of the uneasiness among the big bulls to flood the market with selling orders, in the hope of a break in one or more unguarded spots.

United Aircraft tumbled about 13 points to 137.

United Corporation, the Morgan-Drexel-Bonbright $220,000,000 utility holding corporation, dropped off to around 68, losing more than half of its recent gains.

The U. S. Supreme Court today held constitutional the New York State law requiring foreign corporations to pay a license fee of six cents a share on all stock of no par value during the first year's operation of the corporation in the State.

The State had appealed after the Circuit Court of Appeals knocked out the law, holding it afforded no basis for assessment. A tax of $15,000 levied on the Thermiodyne Radio Corporation, now bankrupt afforded the test case.

CO-OPERATION HELPING OIL

Los Angeles, May 13—Good progress is being made on the oil conservation program, as outlined during the recent conference in New York, and international conditions appear brighter, says President Reeser of American Petroleum Institute.

He takes the view that anything so vital to the industry as the proposed program cannot be worked out in a few weeks; that the problems are international in scope, and that co-operation already evinced is the surest guaranty that the world program will be carried out as agreed.

He expressed himself as well satisfied with the California situation as it is being worked out through curtailment of production and declared that from reports he had received he was convinced the example being set by the major producing companies, which are meeting reduction quotas 100 per cent, was having the desired effect on smaller companies.

Will Supervise Plane Construction

New York, May 13—R. J. Goodman Grouch, former technical aeronautical engineer of the Whittelsey Manufacturing Company of Bridgeport, Ct., will sail for this country within two weeks to supervise construction in the Whittelsey plant of the Avro Avain airplane, 1000 of which the company expects to build within a year.

INVESTORS ARE TOLD TO BUY CAREFULLY

By FRANK H. MELOON
Financial Editor

Dictionaries of a decade or so ago began to define "bromide" as a "saying so often repeated as to lack point or interest." Seven of the stock market weekly letters on the writing desk contain the "bromide" advice to investors that "this is a time to buy stocks carefully." The point is that stocks should be bought carefully at all times. Insertion of such advice in brokers' letters helps to take up space, and that is about all.

able to enlighten his hearers on many points regarding which the average person is considerably in the dark. He always speaks conservatively, as befits his position.

J. J. Mantell, former vice-president of the Erie Railroad assuming the task of rehabilitation of Chinese railways, takes up work once performed by Herbert Hoover. Now the job will be accompanied by loans that eventually are expected to total around a half billion dollars.

Gilbert M. Clayton, statistician of the Chicago Stock Exchange, with operations of which many former Bostonians are connected, sends me a copy of an interesting booklet describing the activities of the organization. These include a stock exchange school with more than 400 students registered.

• • •

The booklet suggestions, which apply in this and elsewhere as well as in Chicago, follow:

1—Buy securities that are basically worth more than the price for which you can purchase them.

2—If you ever get a chance to sell your holdings at a price that is more than what you think is their true value, sell.

3—Do not buy or sell on tips.

4—Give consideration to the stability of the securities you buy.

5—Do not mix your charity and your investing.

7—Select your broker carefully.

8—Buy only what you can afford to buy.

8—Invest more than a small part of your money in promotional enterprises.

10—Invest in an industry or a business with a future.

11—Consider the type of men who have charge of the institution in which you are going to invest.

13—Diversify your investments.

14—Spend a few months each day thinking about your financial program and your securities.

Rapid expansion of the Angora goat and mohair industry in the United States in recent years, due largely to the increased domestic demand for mohair clothing and upholstery, is reported by an interdepartmental committee of experts appointed by the United States Department of Agriculture and Commerce to make a survey of the situation

It is estimated that more than 3,000,000 Angora goats are now clipped annually in the six leading producing states, as compared with 2,348,000 goats clipped in the year 1920. During this period the average weight of mohair fleeces per goat has increased as a result of improved production methods, with the result that production of mohair, including kid hair, in the six states is approximately 14,000,000 pounds annually, as compared with 8,474,000 pounds in 1920.

Declaring that the pioneer phase of the industry is passing, the committee emphasizes the need for continued improvement in the quality of goats and fleeces. Increased efficiency in production and marketing methods and the establishment of official United States grades for mohair. The committee concluded that in attempting the development of mohair standards, it is advisable to consider one factor at a time and diameter of fiber has been selected as the basis for the grades

New England Telephone and Telegraph Company serves the majority of the telephone subscribers in the New England States other than Connecticut. At the end of 1928, the value of the telephone plant, including land and buildings and general equipment necessary to give service to the many users was $250,000,000. Although gross revenues for the year 1928 increased over those of 1927, the amount earned on the average book cost of real estate, plant, equipment and working capital was less than 6 per cent.

Has radio ceased to be a seasonal industry? Stanley Perkins, president of the U. S. Radio & Television Corporation, stated today that orders were coming in at a rapid rate. "The era at which our business is running now is proof of the fact that radio is no longer a seasonal industry," he said. "It is a year-round business, and the industry itself is rapidly attaining stabilization after its mushroom growth of a few years ago. For this large, well-founded corporation with ample facilities, there will be plenty of business. There is plenty of room for many others in the radio business for those companies that keep step with the progress of the industry. Broadcasting stations, 600 homes in the United States and only 8,000,000 of these homes now have radio sets. Radio is a potential market for at least 10,000,000 new sets without consideration of the replacements that the present home already using the radio."

Professor Gustav Cassel, Sweden's economic authority, agrees with Pres. E. H. H. Simmons of the New York Stock Exchange that stock speculation does not absorb productive capital and in article in last issue of Quarterly Report of Skandinsvaeks Kreditaktiebolagat of Stockholm, he concludes that "it seems scarcely rational to endeavor to check stock speculation by raising the bank rates or by fixing particularly high rates of interest for loans to the stock exchange." Such procedure, he adds, might even lead to direct stimulation of lending to the stock exchange "as if fact has happened in the United States, where capital from the whole country has streamed into New York to take advantage of the high rates of interest in the exchange." Limitation of credits and margin restrictions he regards as more effective remedies.

A declaration that recent development of a stock market depression "that seems almost without limit and is injurious to moderate advances in rates of interest fall very unfavorably "the development and functioning of the New York money market as a great and reasonably stable national and world financial center," is contained in a survey of "Money and Credit and Their Effect on Business," prepared by W. Corn was firmer, opening at ¾c. to 1c. up, and subsequently showing all around gains. Oats were easy. Provisions tended to advance.

MANY STOCKS SHOW SMALL YIELD

By B. C. FORBES

NEW YORK, May 13—John J. Raskob, who has been leading a gentleman's life since last November, declared that the old yardstick for measuring stock prices, namely, a fair multiple times a stock's earnings, was not of late showing that 15 times earnings was a not unreasonable nowadays Would it astonish you to know that 60 per cent of our industrials common stocks are today selling by

The authors of Post's Manual, financial tomes famous for years, have analyzed nearly 400 industrial common stocks and, based on 1928 earnings, this is what they find.

Under 10 times earnings	Per Cent 16.7
10 to 12	8.4
12 to 15	6.8
15 to 20	20.0
20 to 25	13.7
25 to 30	9.4
30 to 50	11.7
50 to 100	3.3
Over 50	0.0
Earned nothing on common	9.6
Total	100.0

This comment is added: "Of this large group of industrial stocks, 59.3 per cent were selling at over 15 times their 1928 earnings per share. More than three quarters, or 79.7 per cent, were selling at over 12 times their earnings; 60.9 per cent were selling at 10 times their earnings and 40.3 per cent were selling at over 20 times earnings."

This showing is not conclusive to speculative enthusiasm.

A lieutenant of detectives, commenting on last Saturday's reference in this column to the May Day parade of Communists in New York, writes in part:

"I have been a member of the Police Bureau for more than 20 years. The last five years I have had charge of details pertaining to industrial and forger assignments, which brings me in contact not only with the parlor Bolsheviki, but also the so-called leaders and fanatics associated with clubs and societies As a result I would suggest first, that adequate laws be enacted so that the federal, state and city authorities could handle this dangerous serpent, which is surely growing in this country, and secondly, instead of sending back these ungrateful foreigners enact laws to deal properly with the American born 18 year old hoodlum class and descent, head these new-fangled associations and not only give aid to the malcontents, but fan the flame by creating new associations with high-sounding titles. They are the direct cause of the expansion of this Bolshevik movement in this country. Not until we have such laws will the evil be eradicated."

Charles H. Sabin, of the Guaranty Trust Company, New York, years ago remarked to me that, while he spend a lot about the importance of picking the right kind of employes, it was just as important for a young man to pick the right kind of employer.

David Lewis, the new 39-year-old president of the Pullman Company, did just that—as also, by the way, did Lewis E. Brown, who recently succeeded the late Theodore F. Merseles as president of the Johns-Manville Corporation. More than 20 years ago Crawford, a canny Scot, threw in his lot, after finishing college, with Howard F. Carry, then vice-president of the American Car & Foundry. Carry took Lewis by the step until he became the genius dominating the Pullman Company. At each step he took Crawford with him, the latter becoming executive vice-president of Pullman last year.

When President Carry suddenly was carried off a few weeks ago the high-up employes were unanimous over what the directors might do. One of them tells me, "We all heaved a sigh of relief when Mr. Crawford was made president. He has made himself one of us."

The thunderous likes of Pullman's new president is furnished this column by one of his intimates: "He is the traditional Scottish characteristics. He has also a remarkable financial analytical mind. He has lots of vision and a personality that insures the respect, confidence and loyalty of subordinates. He likes men, is a pretty good golfer and vice-president of Hillcrest Country Club. He found time to be a member of the Chicago Regional Plan Commission and to serve on the executive committee of the Industrial Club."

A steel employe writes: "Those hands and heads, even though the United States Steel Corporation is operating at 103 per cent of capacity, have put a shorter day and six hours—would take opening of the stock. A pipe mill near Pittsburgh, I was told today, has put in two pipe machines, each operated by five men, which have taken the place of 200 workmen. Are they carrying this sort of thing too far?

"There should be old-age pensions. A small sales tax or something else that each person could pay seems easy and right. It is a crime to send poor old men or poor old women to the poorhouse who were good citizens and helpful in a community."

EXTEND DRIVE FOR MEMBERS

With 18 new members enrolled at the regular meeting of Fitchburg Hall, Worcester st., the membership drive of the County Waterford Association promises to be even more successful than was anticipated.

The drive, begun last month, will be continued until all former residents and descendants of residents of the historic Irish country have been communicated with. It is believed a great number will avail themselves of the opportunity to renew acquaintances of long standing

Plans were discussed for the approaching May party and for an outing during the summer. Following the business session in the Colonial ballroom at Hotel Commander this evening President Christopher L. Gambon presided, a social hour was held.

Chef's Day Wednesday

NEW ENGLAND housewives, who regularly attend Chef's Day each Wednesday in the Martha Lee Kitchen never are at a loss for a delicious answer to the three-times-a-day question, "What shall we eat?" Moreover, they have a collection of recipes which will be handed down from generation to generation as the cream of cookery of this age.

The lesson that will be given next Wednesday by Dominico DiSolvo, chef of the Mansion Inn at Cochituate, will be exceptionally interesting, covering as it will the preparation of assorted Hors d'Oeuvres a la Mansion Inn, Vol-au-Vent Gate Salad, Fillet Mignon, Mansion Inn, Banana Fritters Mansion Inn Cheese and Lobster a la Newburz.

Mr. DiSolvo was born in Abruzzi, Italy, and served his apprenticeship in his native land. In 1919 he came to Boston to the University Club, later going to the Brunswick Hotel and to the Boston Art Club. For [illegible] he has been head chef at the Hart prototype to the Mansion Inn, and we can certainly count on a very fine lesson from this skilled artist Wednesday.

DELICIOUS CHOCOLATE PUDDING MADE IN EMERGENCY—MARTHA LEE

This quick-to-make and easy-to-eat pudding is good served with ginger ale and English quality biscuits.

Emergency Pudding

PERHAPS some of you have had the same experience that I did last Sunday—discovering an hour before dinner time that I had completely forgotten to make any provision for a dessert.

It is at times like these that the emergency shelf justifies its being, and I was certainly delighted to find on mine a package of a favorite ready-prepared chocolate pudding powder. I especially like this powder because I know that the cocoa in it is the finest quality of Dutch cocoa and the other ingredients are of a similar high grade.

TOOK A MOMENT.

It really only took a moment to dissolve the chocolate powder and 2 tbsp. of sugar in a pint of milk, while the balance of a pint of milk was scalded. Stirring the pudding mixture into the hot milk and cooking it until smooth (about 10 minutes), I added to it a few chopped nuts and a little candied fruit that I happened to have on hand, together with the stiffly beaten whites of 2 eggs.

I poured my pudding into individual molds, and while it was chilling in a pan of ice I made a quick marshmallow sauce by dissolving a few marshmallows with a little hot milk in the top of my double boiler and stirring until of the right consistency. Served with some chilled ginger ale and English quality biscuits I had a delicacy sent to challenge the most critical!

GOOD FOR US.

As I've said so often, it's comforting to reflect that ginger ale is as good for us, as it is good tasting, being a first-class stimulator of those necessary gastric juices. Try it combined with a third pure grape juice, orange juice, strawberry juice or other fruit juice. And be sure that you choose a mild ginger ale that does not contain strong condiments to irritate your system.

We choose, as you see in the picture, a brand bottled under the most wholesome sanitary conditions possible, made of finest materials combined in proper proportion.

The English quality biscuits you will find at your grocer's either in bulk or the smart package assortment. They come in a delightful variety of flavors—eleven different kinds in fact—and you may be sure that your first box will not be your last.

Delicious Salad by Using Turnips

A delicious salad is made by shredding raw, young turnips into julienne pieces, crisping them in ice water for half hour and then another half hour in a French dressing colored deep red with paprika. Serve on lettuce beds.

How to Get Results From Thermometer

In using one of the new meat thermometers, which is stuck into the center of the roast, remember that when it reaches 160 degrees the roast is rare. It is medium well done at 165 degrees and well done at 170 to 175. This handy new thermometer eliminates all guess work from roasting.

On Day Dreaming

By LOUIS E. BISCH, M. D., Ph. D.

SOME people seem to worry because of their day-dreaming.

Harm does not result, however, from an individual's building air-castles during the day, but rather that he builds too many of them. In other words, that he overdoes his day-dreaming.

The greatest inventions and plays and novels and poems and other works of art as well as discoveries have been the products of day-dreaming. These day musings and longings and imaginings have been characteristic of all the greatest people that ever lived.

But the thing is that these people not only dreamed, but that they dreamed constructively.

What they dreamed they put to the test.

They did not remain satisfied with merely wishing. They actually built foundations under their dreams and raised tangible edifices that later symbolized their fame.

As a matter of fact, it would be better if the average individual daydreamed a little more than he does. Of course, I mean the right kind of day-dreaming.

We are too much on the go, and give too little time to preparing first in our imaginations what we intend to execute.

And, to be sure, only to dream and never to execute is as bad as always trying to do things before first dreaming about them, before first planning and weighing and considering possibilities.

The trouble with us Americans is that we take so little time to think—to dream.

We are all activity.

We are too much on the go and too little time is given to relaxation and dreaming.

Every human being has inner urges and cravings that he can bring to the fore if he would but dream a little.

Most of us are more creative than we realize.

What we need is self-expression, not following the herd.

Many an artist did not suspect the fact until he dreamed and until he expressed his dreams.

In this way some of the greatest minds of all time have developed.

Each responded to unconscious cravings and in the works of each lay fashioned in imagery the form, whether music or what not, best suited to his own personality.

Thus the genius is a creative artist of the very highest type—the greatest dreamer of all.

He reaches out and projects in a daring way that which has never been done before.

He is original and distinctive because he has practised dreaming and has learned to reach down into the deepest recesses of his soul.

All art embodies the dreams of the human race.

The art-work, which the creative artist employs in developing his conceptions, differs in structure in no important way from the dreams he dreams.

Artists know how to dream and they know also how to make them come true.

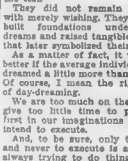
AUCTION BRIDGE

by WILBUR C. WHITEHEAD

THE DISTRIBUTIONAL FACTOR



Auction Bidding: South's opening bid of one Heart is taken out by North with a bid of one Spade and there is no further bidding. The 4-4-4-1 distribution of the hand, rather than the four honors, dictates the Spade instead of a No Trump take-out.

Contract Bidding: South, with 5¼ Probable Tricks in support of Spades, and with normal holding in the suit, raises his partner's bid of one Spade to three Spades, which North increases to the game bid of four Spades.

The Play: East opens the Diamond King. Dummy winning with the Ace. Declarer counts his possible losers as one Spade, three Diamonds and one Club. He can pick up two of these and make game by ruffing one Diamond in Dummy and finding the King of Spades with West, not more than twice guarded. He cannot afford to ruff two Diamonds in Dummy, as he must keep two trumps in Dummy to come through West the second time should the first finesse win.

Should the Spade finesse fail, two Diamonds must be ruffed to save game and this East can prevent by leading trumps after winning with the King of Spades. Game, therefore, depends upon the situation of the King of Spades.

At Trick 2, Dummy leads a small Spade for the first finesse, which wins. Dummy then ruffs a Diamond and the second finesse is taken. The lead of the Ace of Spades then drops the King, and nothing remains for Declarer except to drive out the Ace of Clubs for the establishment of the suit.

Had the King of Spades been with East or had West held four Spades to the King, game could not have been made against perfect defense.

Tomorrow's article will show the bidding and play of another hand.

Mr. Whitehead will answer questions concerning your bridge problems. Write to him care of this paper, enclosing self-addressed stamped envelope.

Fish Salad for Four

One pound of flaked cooked fish, 1 dozen shrimps, 1 cucumber, 4 radishes, 4 tomatoes, 4 tbsps. capers, 1 c. mayonnaise.

SIMMER slowly a pound of fish, such as halibut, haddock or salmon, with half a bayleaf, 12 peppercorns, 4 cloves, half a tsp. each of salt and minced onion and one-eighth tsp. of paprika.

This may be cooked very slowly in water enough to cover but the best results are obtained by placing fish and seasonings on parchment paper, tying it tightly like a bag and dropping this into boiling water to simmer for 15 minutes. Let the fish cool in the liquid and then chill it. (A pound of canned tuna fish may be used instead and allowed to marinate in a well seasoned French dressing in the refrigerator.)

Peel, slice and chill the tomatoes and cucumber. Boil the shrimp in salted water for 10 minutes; let cook in the water the same as the clean. (Again canned tuna may be substituted if desired). Sprinkle with salt and lemon juice and chill. Assemble the salad. Pass the remainder of the mayonnaise on the salad.

The fish is "meaty," the oil and egg of the dressing supplying the needed fat; and with hot coffee or tea, punch and a hot biscuit, or finger-length graham toast buttered, you have a meal as appetizing as it is seasonably wholesome; and as good to look at as it is good for you.

HIDDEN FIRES by Aileen de Vilbiss

Story of Love and Mystery in Gay Honolulu

CHAPTER 1

OMEWHERE that night, his evil star was shadowing Don Carlos. . . .

He was thinking of Eve as he sat on the deck of the little bbing, yellow ferry, which was taking him over to Sausalito, t the shores of Marin. The hills looked black against the hiteness of the night.

How he loved her—this fair girl who looked like one of otticelli's angels! Hair of that delicate sheen which the ffodil has caught in its silken net; soft, limpid eyes of the ep blue of clear, glacial lakes. He was to find out that very ght that her nature was as cold as the water which springs om mountain sources. But, if poets do not lie, lovers are ind—and Don Carlos had been up to this time. For he loved ve Carson with an overwhelming love.

He had met her in those lonely ays following his return from aris, where he had been studying erature at the Sorbonne, and her ir beauty had captivated him om the start. She was such a ange from the dark French omen whom he had known the ur years in Paris. He could not ep nights, thinking of the succss which must come to him in s chosen work if he worked hard . . that success which was to laid at the tiny, slender feet of ve.

But by such small matters as the turn in a road are the affairs of men changed . . .

There at the bend of the wooded path, where nestled the tiny bungalow among the eucalyptus trees which Eve shared with another girl, Don Carlos was struck dumb at the sight he saw through the bright shaft of light gleaming from the window.

Eve in another man's arms! When she had sworn she loved him only!

She had neglected to pull down the shade while she stood in the other man's arms. She had on a pale blue negligee which enhanced her fairness, and showed her loveliness to perfection—that tiny, rounded form of hers which would always make the pulses of men pound, and women envious! It struck him with ironical force, even as he stood dumbfounded, that she clung to the stranger with the same tenderness as she did to himself.

Was Eve, then, one of these women who loved lightly—and often?

They did not hear Don Carlos' step on the porch, as he covered the space which lay between them. He burst into the room, wild-eyed —not stopping to knock—remembering only that the girl he loved was unfaithful.

Eve's guest faced him, still standing with his arms around her in a close embrace. Don Carlos recognized him as George Phillips, a neighbor of Eves. She seemed to be frozen, unable to move as she stood waiting for Don Carlos to make the next move.

"Eve. What does this mean? What is this man to you? Tell me!" He approached her madly, his voice shaking in its fury.

At his words Eve found her tongue.

"And what do YOU mean by bursting in on us in such a fashion? Where is all this breeding you're always ranting about? Do gentlemen come unannounced where they're not asked—or wanted?"

"Eve! Are you crazy? Get him out! Tell him to go."

Don Carlos grabbed her by the arm roughly.

Ouch! Let go—you beast! You're hurting my arm."

"What right has this man to take you in his arms? Tell me!" He shook her roughly. George Phillips advanced threateningly.

"Take care, Whiting. Keep your hands off Eve! I warn you!"

"You warn me? Ha! Ha! That's a good one. Eve, tell him that only last week you—"

"I'll tell him nothing! Let go of my arm!"

"I'll let go of your arm when you tell him to go. What does this mean, Eve? Did you invite him over to see you?"

"And what if I did? What harm is there in a neighbor dropping in to see me when you go and leave me alone?"

"None of your lies, Eve. This man was making love to you as I came up the path. Are you in love with him—or with me? This thing has to be settled now."

"You bet your life it's got to be settled," interrupted George Phillips. "May I ask what right you have to come bursting in on Eve and any caller she may be entertaining?"

But Don Carlos was conscious only of the fair-haired girl who stood defiantly before him, sullenly glaring into his angry eyes. She knew that Don Carlos was numb to everything but his own anger—his bitter disillusionment. His face was drained of every trace of color; she felt that, at this moment, he could have killed George Phillips.

Don Carlos turned towards Eve. "Go to your room while we settle this."

"I'll do nothing of the sort. I'm going to stay right here. You're the only one who isn't welcome," she said sneeringly.

Don Carlos' mouth tightened; how well Eve knew that when he thrust out his lower jaw he intended to see a thing through to the bitter finish.

"Is that so? Perhaps, my dear, if you told this man the truth," he began.

"Why should I tell him anything—or you either, for that matter?" I'm my own mistress," Eve began swaggering about the room. She thought she had the issue in her own hands.

"Sure; all's fair in love and war," began Phillips. "Eve doesn't belong to you—yet; or to any man for that matter. Do you, Eve? Now, Whiting, why not be reasonable? Clear out and let Eve and me——"

"Finish your love-making?" taunted Don Carlos, while Eve was watching both men from beneath lowered dark lashes. She liked to feel that she was the center of a stage; there was a sense of cheap melodrama in her. Ever since the cave age there have been women who, like Eve, revel in blood spilled for their worthless selves. She laughed wildly and hysterically and tossed her sweetest smile to Phillips.

It was that laugh that made Don Carlos see red. To him it was a threat—the gauntlet thrown down that Phillips had won—temporarily. Reason left him then. Had any one told him, as he came over on the ferry that night, wound up in his dreams of love, that before the night was over, he would be a potential murderer he would have laughed.

His right arm struck out, and caught George Phillips under the chin. He went down, stunned by the onslaught. But not for long, for blond George Phillips was of athletic build, and a match for any man. They grappled—there on the floor of Eve's living room, two wild throwbacks to a primitive era.

Eve ran frantically about the twisting figures.

"Oh, stop it! Don Carlos! George! Stop it, I say. The neighbors will hear you!"

But primal emotions unleashed the two men paid no attention to her, despite her pleading.

"Don Carlos, stop it! Do you hear me? Do you want to kill him?" for Don Carlos was on top, choking the very breath out of his hated rival. His long slender fingers, which had always fascinated Eve, were wound around the thick neck of Phillips. Demoniacal glee showed on Don Carlos' face. Don Carlos, despite his artistic nature, was proving more than a match for Phillips. He was fighting for love; for ideals—for home. And this gave him strength.

"You'll never break up another home!" muttered Don Carlos through his sets teeth. But George Phillips did not hear him. Blood was running from a bad cut in his upper lip. His right eye was fast swelling shut.

"Oh, you're killing him," screamed Eve. Eve's eyes were staring. Strange gurgling noises came from her lips. Fear had now taken possession of her. She didn't want murder there in her living room—

"Oh, please! Please, Don Carlos!"

The collar of Philips' shirt was torn open, and Don Carlos found himself gazing at it, fascinated. He almost wished that it was Eve's neck—that soft warm throat of hers' which ofttimes in the past he had covered with hot burning kisses. She, too, should suffer, he thought, in his madness. And that thought gave him strength to raise Phillip's body and dash it madly to the brick fireplace. His head crashed against the jutting brick edge, and Philips lay, a crumpled mass, silent.

REASON RETURNS.

Reason reigned for a moment. Had he, too, joined the hell-bound army of murderers? Don Carlos looked at his own hand as if it were not a part of him—as though it were some instrument that had been thrust into his hands in a moment of frenzy. An instrument he had used against a fellow being . . . an instrument of death. . .

But Eve was talking, muttering strange little sounds to Phillips as she bent over him. . . .

"He's dead; he doesn't move. You've killed him, Don Carlos. You're a murderer!" her voice was hysterical, the hysterical voice of a strident fish wife. There had been other times when he had noticed it, but then he had been in love . . . He had always overlooked her temper.

Dumbly, as reason fought its way back to his numbed senses, he looked at Eve, dimly realized she was talking.

"Why did you do it?" What if he did have his arm around me—a little innocent love-making. What am I going to get of my life with you—tell me that? A struggling author, writing a lot of trash that nobody will buy. At least George can buy me furs and cars. . ."

Eve, running true to form. Thinking of material comforts, even as two men fought over her. Her voice bore in on Don Carlos' thoughts.

Bah! No human being was worth so much suffering.

He gazed at the quiet form in Eve's arms, at the disheveled state of the fair-haired girl bending over it—that girl whom he had loved dearer than life—and rushed out into the night. Eve's voice in his ears. . . .

"Murderer!"

A SIX-DAY NOVEL

id, "you will think better of e—and my father."

"What you need, dad," said adia, "is a good lawyer — the t one we can get. How about dge Kendall?"

Her father shook his head, hopelly.

"All I know is that I feel myf trapped, enmeshed by circumances. I'm wondering what ll become of you. I've lived my e and I really don't matter. It's u, Nadia darling—"

She was not at home when the lice came, because she had t her father and gone in her adster to the home of Judge endall, the best lwayer in town. Briefly, hurriedly she told her le.

Judge Kendall pursed his lips. Nadia, your father's fate is in the nds of one man. Old man Kirk. see him. If you can win him over he's smart enough to find a way out of anything. He holds every last trump card. Now, that's as good advice as I could give you if you paid me ten thousand dollars—and I'm giving it to you free."

When she got home her father was gone.

Nadia's father was arrested, charged with embezzlement, early in June. By mid-September it was all over. He was taken away to serve from five to ten years for embezzlement.

At the last, Harvey Reynolds was a good sport.

"We'll live this down yet—both of us," he promised.

Nadia came out of it with less than two thousand dollars.

Poorer, too, in friends. The people she had known—her "set"—were kindly and sympathetic, but most of them found it convenient to be tremendously busy in other directions.

Even the roadster, the eight-cylinder car that had been her joy, was gone. She bought a second-hand four-cylinder and moved to a furnished room on a boarding house street.

It would be necessary, she realized, to start earning her living, a difficult proposition, since her mind was filled with a constant hope that she might solve the mystery of her father's debacle.

Wiggins, she was convinced, was the guilty man. He had testified briefly at the trial, a bald man with the thin face of a zealot. He had been in the bank 20 years, a respected, spotless citizen, with no vices, no extravagances.

Old Kirk had seemed to take a malicious delight in prosecuting her father. He had hated Harvey Reynolds with the cold malice of a miser for a wastrel, of a prude for a Bohemian. Young Steve was, Nadia insisted, cut off the same cloth of his father.

A new chapter of a new volume waited, unexpectedly, to be opened. Nadia was startled, delighted, when a letter came from Judge Kendall enclosing a check for $500:

"Dear Nadia: This may help a bit. Please feel under no obligation." Your friend, Kendall.

So brief, almost abrupt, was the kindness of the old judge.

A week later she was in the China Rose Tea Room as sole proprietor.

She had rented a small cottage on the main road a mile from town, and fitted it up.

Her prices would be fair, but not too cheap. Twenty-five cents for a pot of tea, 35 cents for sandwiches, 25 cents for small cakes.

She wanted a girl to serve the tables. Her intention was to look after the food in the kitchen.

She found Ginetta Tomasinni.

Ginetta's father was a truck farmer who lived not a quarter of a mile away. Scarcely more than 16 years old, her oval face was pale with an ivory tint, there was a flatness about her features, remote resemblance . . . the fact was that, obscurely, she had a Chinese look.

Nadio said, "I think I'll dress you like a Chinese girl—just for atmosphere."

Web Hanson was the first of the townspeople to show up.

Looking out the window, Nadia had a sensation of disturbance, of irritation. Web Hanson wasn't exactly the kind of man she could easily welcome; she had met him once, casually, months ago and there had been a too pronounced glint of desire in his eye.

At 30 he was the proprietor of a gas stove manufacturing plant and was rated as being worth nearly a million.

Facing Nadia, he obviously lacked her own poise; now that he was there, it seemed, he hardly knew what to do.

"I heard you had this place out here, Miss Reynolds, and as I was passing I thought—that is I decided to drop in and have a bite to eat or something."

"It was nice of you to stop," she replied. "Won't you sit down?"

Web Hanson found his bearing and a gathering fluency.

"Here, Miss Reynolds—why don't you come and sit down here to keep me company?" He smiled. "That's one of the first rules of business, be nice to your customers. That's the way to build trade."

Nadia dropped in a chair on the other side of the table. "Is that the way you built up your business?" she asked with a slow smile.

"Me?" I should say not. I was never nice to any customer. Matter of fact, I don't see them at all. No, I built up my business by inheriting the stock from an uncle and letting my general manager—he was an expert—run things. He's got the brains and I've got the business."

This was cynical, but it had a not unpleasant touch of frankness. Nadia saw that Web Hanson was not there to talk business, she could feel, intuitively, that he was attracted to her and she was surprised to find that she was not disliking him. There was a possibility, she admitted, that she had become prejudiced too easily. It would not be difficult, however, to keep him at a safe distance.

She found herself, oddly, wondering why he had never married. There was at once something manly about him and, contrarily, something that was not altogether pleasant.

"I heard you had opened this place and I wondered why," he said.

"To earn a living for myself," Nadia replied.

"How is your father getting along?" he asked.

Tears trembled in Nadia's eyes.

"I didn't mean to hurt your feelings," Web Hanson said. "It's a shame to lock up a man—and leave a nice kid like you to face the world single-handed."

He paused and looked at her, an enigmatic expression in his eyes.

"Of course, if you really wanted any friends—and help—I'd be glad to do anything myself. If you wanted me to I might do a lot——"

"Do you mean it?" she demanded, alert in every nerve. "Do you think you could——"

Surprise at her swift response showed in the widening of Web Hanson's eyes.

"Sure I mean it," he asserted stoutly. "Why not? Say, if I'd had any idea you'd be so sensible I wouldn't have waited this long. It'll be a pleasure to help you out, Miss Reynolds. Fact is, I've always wanted to know you better, lots better——"

She scarcely noticed what he was saying; it sounded merely like awkward politeness, an effort to appear gracious.

"Do you have any influence with the governor—the Board of Pardons and Parole?"

"You mean about your father. I'll get to work on it."

"Thank God!" Nadia breathed.

"I'll get in touch with Jim Leffett, a friend of mine—he's a friend of Governor Bailey. I've never tried to hatch an egg like this before and it may take a little time. And a whole lot of caution."

"It's strange how you just dropped in here today and how you've brought me new courage," she said. "Strange!"

He looked at her straight in the eye. "When I spoke about helping you, at first, it might as well be understood that I wasn't thinking about your father at all. I meant helping you, personally."

Nadia understood him but vaguely. "But I don't need any help."

"Making plenty money here?"

"A living."

"You deserve better than just a living—a girl like you. You used to have a pretty foxy existence, I understand. It must be hard to, well, to slow up, this way."

"No—I like it."

"You living out here all alone?"

"Ginetta stays with me. We have enough to do to keep us busy and it's never lonesome."

"What you need is a guy with my nerve to pull you down to earth. And I hereby nominate myself for the job."

"What, precisely, Mr. Hanson, is your idea like?"

"Oh, you need an interest in life, a human, personal interest. But that's only half of it. I'm the other half. I need an interest, too. I think we'd make a great pair of litle pals."

Nadia felt a surge of cold anger mounting in her veins. The fool! He was, in his heavy way, attempting that in which a dozen men, infinitely more clever, had failed. He was making love—if it could be called that—with the insane idea that his money constituted an attraction.

"I'm not a bad sort, when you get to know me right," Web Hanson confided confidentially.

All at once it occurred to Nadia that he was not a baleful, sinister creature. He was — the feeling spread like a revelation—ludicrous. He hadn't insulted her; no, he didn't have that power.

Her rising indignation gave way to a sense of his ridiculousness. A desire to laugh at him began to tremble through her nerves. The desire, almost uncontrollabe, was an near as she had ever approached hysteria.

A quick, ringing peal of laughter escaped her. Nadia was as much surprised as Web Hanson himself.

Hanson looked a little startled. "Say, what's the matter."

"For one thing—the way you've been trying to make, so to speak, a proposition to me, Mr. Hanson. Of course, there's not a chance—that's flat. And it was all done so stupidly, wasn't it?"

Slowly, Web Hanson grinned.

"Was I as bad as all that?"

"You certainly were."

"And you say there's not a chance, for me, with you?"

"Not a chance on earth."

"The trouble with you, Miss Reynolds, is that you jump at conclusions. Sure, I know I'm not a slick sheik like some of those society tea hounds you used to train with, but I've got more stuff on the ball than any of that bunch. Sounds like I'm bragging, doesn't it?"

But it didn't exactly. His voice had lowered and, despite the firmness of her conviction that he was impossible, loutish, Nadia could not but help feel a suppressed power in the man. Just for a fleeting instant she sensed something tremendously compelling in the steadiness of his eye; but in that brief fragment of time his chance to impress her deeply vanished. She was looking straight at him; his eye met hers unwaveringly, but under the clear impact of her look—it was no more than a flash—he let his gaze quail.

"Well, I'm not boasting," he said, forcing a stubborness into his words. "You underrate me; but I'm willing to drop all that. It didn't get across, and I'm not going to make a complete sap out of myself."

Ginetta came in to clear away the dishes.

"I'm coming out here again," he said. "Probably I'll be a regular customer, unless you forbid me to come."

"I won't do that," Nadia told him.

"And I just want you to know that I wasn't stalling about helping your father. I'll do my level best in that direction. And—get this—I don't expect anything for it."

Ginetta, after Web Hanson had left, sulked.

"That man," she said softly in a voice that was, at once, a purr and a snarl.

"What's the matter with Mr. Hanson? Don't you like him?"

"I hate him!"

Nadia was startled. "But why! You have no reason to——"

"My ears are not plugged with cotton. I heard what he said."

A feeling akin to shame rushed over Nadia. She had not realized that Ginetta had been in hearing distance.

"Oh, don't mind that, Ginetta. He didn't exactly mean anything by what he said."

"He is not," Ginetta declared stubbornly, "fit to breathe the same air as you."

Nadia felt her heart give a swell of pride at the affection implied in Ginetta's words. It was the first trace of anything of the kind the girl had revealed.

"I don't want you to take prejudices against customers," Nadia told her.

"I hated him before he ever came here," Ginetta said, cryptically.

"Nonsense. You couldn't have known Mr. Hanson."

Ginetta shrugged her shoulders. She was silent.

The girl showed no desire to go out nights, or to visit her people. In her little room adjoining Nadia's she was cat-like in her quietness.

Not much money, Nadia discovered, was to be made quickly in the China Rose Tea Room, but enough for a living and a little above. But it was a beginning—no business, no career, could be expected to flourish at the start.

Web Hanson did not return immediately and, because her heart was totally given over to dreams of her father's freedom, her mind reverted to the man who had promised to give help.

She called Web Hanson on the telephone at his factory.

"I'll be right out," he said, and she thought his voice was a trifle thick.

It was an afternoon of a driving rain, a steady, gloomy downpour that seemed endless.

Nadia went to a window and saw a car had stopped near her gate. A man had alighted and was examining a tire that had apparently gone flat.

He shook his head in disgust and started toward her door, seemingly with the intention of stopping in until the rain ceased.

She saw his face. He was Steve Kirk, the son of the man who had ruined her father.

Betty's Ruse -:- Cupid Signs Peace Pact

BETTY sat in the library of her pretty home, waiting, expectant. She already had her bonnet on. Beside her chair a small traveling bag. Her long gloves lay upon the table at her elbow.

Betty opened her vanity case, inspected her face in the small mirror, smiled rather wistfully. Although it was no surprise to her, the ring of the doorbell made her start. She patted her bonnet again and began to draw on her gloves as Janet went through the hall to answer. A moment later Janet appeared in the doorway.

"Mr Sessions to see you, ma'am," said Janet with just the slightest hesitancy.

At a nod from Betty, Janet showed him in and retired.

The tall, good-looking young man stood gazing at Betty, frowning, ill at ease.

Betty, working on her gloves, glanced up at him.

"It was good of you to come, William—Bill."

Bill gazed at her a trifle suspiciously. "What's the idea—sending for me?" he asked.

"Sit down, won't you. There, that's more comfortable—and friendly. Do you realize, William—Bill—that it's three months and two days since I saw you last—in my lawyer's office?"

"Is it?" asked Bill awkwardly.

"You ask why I sent for you. Well, I don't really know; perhaps because I'm going on a long journey. And I happened to think; do you know it's just four years ago tonight that we first met—at the Dawson's dance—don't you remember? You cut in on Halsey. He was furious, but you only laughed at him. I saw a great deal of you after that didn't I? And then we were married. Seems a long while ago, though, doesn't it?"

Bill squirmed in his seat. He waited for her to go on. And she did.

"Don't be restless, William."

"I'm not restless, but you haven't told me just why you had me come here. I thought after the mess we've made of it that you'd never care for a sight of me again."

"How absurd, William! Even if I did decide to go to Reno, that's no reason why we should glare and glower at each other, is it? We can be friends, at least, while we're in the same city."

"So, you're off to the West—on legal business?"

"No, William—Bill, I'm not off to the West. I've changed my mind and my destination. I'm sailing tonight on the Gigantic."

"Paris, I suppose. A lot of them prefer that to Reno nowadays. Much more fashionable, I take it."

Betty let his observations go unanswered.

"Inasmuch as this is—is—farewell, I didn't know but you would like to see me to the boat," said Betty.

Bill sat up in surprise. "Why—why, if I can be of any service, of course, I'll be glad to'——

* * *

Bill had seen Betty aboard the liner and took her hand to say good-bye.

"Too bad you're taking this long trip alone," he said, with a strained smile.

"But I'm not sailing alone," said Betty. "I've taken pattern after you, William. I hear you've been seeking consolation with Gloria—so——"

"Nothing of the sort!" exclaimed Bill hotly. "There's nothing to it. Gloria isn't anything to me. Simply because I've met her a few times socially since we—"

"Now, William, you don't need to explain or apologize. What I wanted to say is that, under the circumstances—since we are nothing to each other any more—nor ever will be—I'm taking advantage of the situation. There's going to be a gentleman aboard who will be attentive to me, who will make it less lonely—and who—some day—perhaps—"

"Who is this man?" demanded Bill savagely.

"I don't know as you have any right to ask," returned Betty evenly. "But if you'd really like to know, come."

She entered the stateroom smiling, with Bill at her heels looking like a thundercloud.

He stopped, peered all around, then turned to her. "What is this, a ghastly joke?" he demanded. "I don't see anyone."

Betty turned him around until he came face to face with the mirror. Then she broke into a laugh that was more than half tears. Bill's mouth dropped open in amazement as realization began to dawn upon him. He flushed, looked into her eyes that were misty, at her lip that was quivering.

"So — I'm — the — gentleman — that's sailing—with you?" asked Bill, with mingled emotions.

Betty shook her head vigorously, looked at him pleadingly.

"But—but, I haven't a thing with me, I couldn't——"

Bill drew her into his arms eagerly. Betty, you're a witch—a wonder. I was a fool even to think of letting you go."

"But you didn't, Bill. I wouldn't let you let me."

STAGE SCREEN MUSIC

MYSTERY FILM AT TWIN HOUSES

By HARLEIGH SCHULTZ

What the public wants it gets. As a once popular song had it, "I Want What I Want When I Want It." Thinking a few leaps ahead always, filmdom tries to sense the public's "want." So now treads one mystery play on the heels of another. Probably they'll continue to come until the film lovers are all fed up. So one will not be surprised to find "Black Waters" all turgid, as mystery seethes throughout this offering now showing at the Modern and Beacon.

Mystery plays hide-and-go-seek with the actors; and a sort of Blind Man Buff role is also that of the audience which may respond as it will—take its medicine as satisfying, or else shiver and shake as if the doses were exceedingly bitter pills given to allay that hunger for the mystery stuff.

This film is adapted from the stage play, "The Fog." The locale is a fogbound craft in San Francisco harbor. The phantom Flying Dutchman never had more gone to its discredit than this schooner; death wins most of the early innings of the game. Weirdly, if you will let yourself drop into the grip of this tale, it will carry you along.

It is a melodrama mystifyingly rampant. You may not wholly enjoy the story, but the film will probably entertain you. It has sound, including about all of the dialogue; it has good photography. Director Marshall Nelan has done lots better things; here he is just so-so.

On the credit side the film programs itself as the first international talking production. Which seems to make that the English Herbert Wilcox came over the sea and staged the show in American waters. There are Britishers and Americans in the cast; hence, perhaps the international tinge.

Of the visiting talent, Capt. John Loder tops the list. For the native sons James Kirkwood, Mary Brian and Lloyd Hamilton do the honors.

Other features at the "twin houses" are "Some Mother's Boy," with Mary Carr, James Rolands and Johnyna Raiston, and "Post Mortems," with Raymond Griffith.

IN CREEPY DRAMA

Mary Brian and James Kirkwood do their best to make you shiver in "Black Waters," mystery melodrama, now playing at the Modern and Beacon.

DIX FILM AT SCOLLAY SQ.

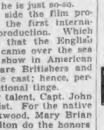
Dix wagers $10,000 of his sweetheart's money that he can tell the whole truth for 24 consecutive hours.

In order to win, he finds himself telling his "lamb's lettuce" that he was in love with the weight-lifting woman of the circus. His boss that he is an unscrupulous businessman, and a "night club hound," telling a beautiful singer at a house party that he thinks her singing is the worst he has ever heard in a long time, and getting himself into all kinds of laugh-provoking jams.



Richard Dix

Helen Kane plays her first role in motion pictures and acquits herself in splendid fashion. She also sings a new number, "Do Something." Others in the cast that do good work are Louis John Bartels, the star of the legitimate stage success "The Show Off," and Dorothy Hall, a new leading lady.

Frank McCormack and his Pals are the hit of the stage show with their "Collegiate Capers." Edgar Bergen, assisted by Miss Chadwell, offers a clever twist at ventriloquism in his act entitled "The Operation." Sonny Thompson and Mabel Rose are a skillful team of colored entertainers. Levan and Bolles present their comedy skit "Mere Nonsense." The Neptune Four, trampe acrobats, close the vaudeville program with a routine of comedy and acrobatic feats. Special features and talking units complete the attractions.

Cash and Revolver Scotch Cafe Loot

The Scotch Cafe, on the second floor at 13 Winter st., was robbed by thieves over the week-end. A desk was broken open and $37 in bills and silver was taken, as well as a bag marked "Old Colony Trust Company," containing $2086. A fully loaded revolver was also taken.

DON BARCLAY IN SHOW HERE

From San Francisco's Barbary Coast to Broadway, from cabaret entertainer to star in Ziegfeld's "Follies," is the story of the rise of Don Barclay, the comedian of "The Theme of Love," John Murray Anderson's stage show at the Metropolitan this week. About the time of the California earthquake—or "fire" as it is referred to there—a newsboy was singing and dancing in cabarets where he sold his papers. So popular did the little chap become that he was engaged as an entertainer, and played in many of old Frisco's well-known landmarks, such as "Midway," "Thalia," "Spider Kelly's," "Bella Union" and many others.

Don Barclay

A few years later found Don Barclay as the principal comedian with Matt Trayers.

He then joined a stock company in St. Louis, and it was there he met Hal Skelly and formed the partnership of Barclay & Skelly.

Barclay's ability won him a star role in burlesque which brought him to New York, where Ziegfeld signed him for the "Follies," in which he played during 1916, '17 and '18. A year later found him in the London Palace, and after that in the London Hippodrome and three other London successes.

Yiddish Comedian to Show in Boston

Ludwig Satz, noted Yiddish-American comedian, who a few years ago was starred on the English stage by A. H. Woods in "Potash & Perlmutter," will make his debut in Boston this season, as guest star of the Arlington theater, beginning Wednesday evening. Satz, will be seen in "A Galician Wedding," a Jewish musical comedy, which will only be given here Saturday night. The music of the colorful operetta was written by Herman Wohl. The book is by William Siegel, while the lyrics are from Bores Rosenthal. Zena Goldstein, prima donna, heads Satz's cast of players.

Hub Stage Favorite Off for Hollywood

ALL-WAGNER PROGRAM AT POPS

By MOSES SMITH

Alfredo Casella presented an all-Wagner program for the first Sunday evening of the "Pops." The list included the Overture and March from "Tannhauser," the "Siegfried Idyll," the Prelude and Introduction to the third act of "Lohengrin," the Prelude to the "Masteringers," Prelude and Love-Death from "Tristan," "Good Friday Spell" from "Parsifal," and the inevitable "Ride of the Valkyries."

This excellent and representative program was performed with far greater sympathy for the composer's intention than Casella has usually displayed. Though the tempi were still too fast, it seemed that the conductor was approaching Wagner without the animosity that is his wont. The "Idyll" was especially grateful to hear.

Earlier in the day Joseph F. Wagner led his Boston Civic Symphony Orchestra in a concert before a goodly audience at Jordan Hall. Hazel Hallett was soloist in the Chopin F minor piano concerto. The purely orchestral numbers included Rossini's Overture, "Barber of Seville," the Intermezzo from Henry Hadley's "Cleopatra's Night," and, for the first time in America, Boellmann's Symphony in F major. This symphony, while displaying no great originality in ideas and treatment, was dramatic, often melodious, and contained much honest music-making.

The other item of importance of the week-end in music was a production, in English, of "Carmen" by the company directed by the dynamic Ethel Leginska. Inasmuch as, at the time of performance, Miss was on the road to Northampton, where Werner Josten was putting on the first American performance of Monteverdi's "Orfeo" and Handel's "Apollo e Daphne," I can simply retell the report of an assistant that Leginska's presentation, featuring local singers and her Women's Symphony Orchestra, was experimental, as she had intended.

It was worth, incidentally, travelling 200 miles to see the Smith College presentation. The performances, which were semi-amateur, were finely conceived and, for the most part, well executed.

DOWLING IN FILM DEBUT HERE

Eddie Dowling, Boston and New England favorite, writer and star of musical comedies, makes his film bow in his first all-talking and singing picture, "The Rainbow Man," which is continued at the Washington st. Olympia and Fenway Theaters this week.

Eddie never made a picture before in his life, yet he wrote the story of this one, and with Jimmy Hanley wrote music and lyrics.

Supporting Dowling are Marion Nixon, Frankie Darro, Sam Hardy and a host of stars.

Canadians to Legalize U.S. Residence by Visit

Montreal, May 13—Four hundred and fifty French-Canadians now residents of Biddeford, Me., and neighboring towns, will return to their native heath early in June to legalize their status in this country. The party will remain in the Province of Quebec only long enough to go through the formalities required to regularize their re-entry into the United States.

United States government officials have been advised that on June 4 the Maine party will make the round trip under the auspices of J. B. Boldue, publisher of a Biddeford French newspaper. They will come across the border by special train. One hundred and fifty of the French-Canadians are coming to Montreal, and parties of similar size go to Sherbrooke and to Quebec.

The object is to take advantage of the United States law, effective March 4 last, giving people of Canadian birth who are now residing in this country, and who did not comply with entry regulations when they left the Dominion, a chance to legalize their American residence. To do that, they are obliged to leave the United States, come North, pay their head tax, procure the necessary papers, legally reenter the line. The visa from the consular office must be obtained from the United States consul in the district whence the Canadians departed for the States.

Nation Decries Power Trust Bridle on Newspapers

Perhaps a free press is not important. The founders of the nation thought it was.

They established it as a fundamental principle of government, and they put it into the Constitution in the First Amendment, adopted in 1791, providing that "Congress shall make no law prohibiting or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press."

The wise guides of the young democracy thus forever prevented corrupt government from stifling the voice of free criticism in the press, the people's protection.

In 1791 nobody could foresee the 1929 threat to the freedom of the press. They could not foresee the wholesale purchase of writers, editors and entire newspapers by the Power Trust, a great monopoly, seeking favors from the Government and from public opinion, which the Government obeys.

On Tuesday an amazed Federal Trade Commission at Washington heard A. R. Graustein, president of the International Paper & Power Company, recite that his company had invested between ten and fifteen million dollars in acquiring partial or complete control of thirteen newspapers.

That was dramatic, but it was only one more link in the chain of infamy which Power Trust officials have been forging for themselves for thirteen months.

Investigation of their files and interrogation of their representatives by the Federal Trade Commission disclosed a black record of corruption that spread not only to newspapers, news writers and news agencies, but to schools, colleges and Legislatures as well.

The public and most of the press listened apathetically until their imagination was caught by this calm, almost boastful recital of the exploits of a single power official, Graustein, seizing thirteen well springs of public information.

Today indignation blazes in private speech and editorial columns. At last the issue is beginning to be understood:

1—Is the public—or is it not — going to continue to have any uncontrolled agencies of public information, free to take the public's side?

2—Or is the public's money, collected by the power people, to be used to own or control schools, legislators and press, and turn them into mere mouthpieces of propaganda in favor of letting the power people make more and more money out of us?

3—In other words, are we or are we not going to have a super-government?

Limiting the Ladies

Here is something for men to remember:

Kathryn Cunningham, specialist on figures and fashions, solemnly asserts that thirty minutes is enough time for any woman to dress. She is as right as rain.

Any girl—and all modern women are girls—ought to be able to slip into the few clothes she wears in five minutes, or at the utmost ten minutes, including shoes and stockings. Allow another five minutes for the arrangement of hair, and there is still fifteen minutes left for powdering and rouging the face. Half an hour is ample.

The trouble with the all-too-important method of dressing, as followed by the modern woman—beg pardon, girl—is that too much time is used in choosing her frock, shoes, hat, stockings and so on and so forth. She uses as much time making up her mind as she does in making up her face, and too much time in making up both.

Every Day Mother's Day

The flowers worn in buttonholes yesterday are laid aside today to wither and shrink and die.

In life there is nothing finer than the sacrifice and devotion of motherhood. They are not a one-day-a-year proposition. They continue, day after day, year after year, through the span of time. About motherhood there is no ostentation; love is its only badge.

Mother's Day is an appropriate tribute to the world's greatest institution. But there are 364 other days in every year.

Flowers are wholly appropriate for the occasion, but don't lay aside appreciation and memory to wither and shrink and die when the day is done.

Abolish Grade Crossings

The State Department of Public Utilities tomorrow hears arguments for better protection at railroad grade crossings in Marblehead, North Andover, Saugus and Newbury. To that list should be added scores of cities and towns in the Commonwealth.

Summer is at hand, with its thousands of touring vacationists and its many grade crossing fatalities. The race between trains and automobiles will end only when grade crossings cease to exist.

More Prison Guards Needed

A convict escapes from the State Prison and a "shoot to kill" order is issued to the guards.

As long as men are imprisoned, men will seek means to escape. "Shoot to kill" orders will not stop them from plotting freedom.

What Warden Hogsett needs at Charlestown is more guards. Massachusetts should supply them at once.

The "Baer" Facts -:- By Bugs Baer

A GENTLEMAN in Savannah wants to know why he didn't talk longer on the radio last Saturday night.

The broadcast was the entertainment buzzed to Commander Byrd at the South Pole. Maj. Bowes said he would allow us five minutes on the air. He still owes us two minutes.

We have listened to many speakers on the educational knobs, and we claim that three minutes is plenty for the male voice, either in triumph or lamentation.

You can say more in three minutes than you can deny in the dotage of a century plant.

The Virginia judge was another talker. The judge spoke three minutes. Trader Horn was slightly more loquacious.

The trader got his long, flowing beard so close to the microphone that we were thankful it was not a vacuum cleaner.

It was the first time we had ever met the trader beard to beard.

He is an [illegible] man with a slight body sneak and wears one of those Inverness capes. He is still sprightly and walks with the aid of traffic signals.

So far as long talks over the radio are concerned, we want to say that the Democratic convention in Madison Square Garden blistered us for life.

As the Savannah gentleman wants a blue print of the chatter, we will give him some of the moronic details.

"Commander Byrd, you are now listening, we hope, to Bugs Baer, better known wherever static is gathered as the voice with the schoolgirl complexion.

"We wish to congratulate you and your brave comrades on your feat in carrying the American flag where it has never been frozen before.

"They say that you are down where zero is so far below that nobody bothers to count it. You are in the land of eternal darkness, blizzards and frost. You are fortunate. The weather is much worse in New York.

"Your discovery of new parking spaces is more remarkable than the deeds of Columbus. After all, the greatest stunt that Columbus ever did was when he discovered that even a queen will give her jewelry to a sailor.

"And now, Commander, although you do not want it and cannot use it, we are going to give you the correct time.

"Listen carefully and when you hear Bombardier Wells drop it will be exactly one minute after the start of the first round."

That was all, and we think it was too much.

The program was broadcast next [illegible] upon popping miles, and Commander Byrd replied almost immediately that the program was coming in like an avalanche of building material.

We hoped that Commander Byrd liked it.

If he didn't, he could always tune out.

Listen, World! -:- By Elsie Robinson

NINE years ago Maggie Allen was 27 years of age and about as hopeless a piece of jetsam as you'd find in the whole tenderloin. She looked twice her age and she had acquired that bitter, sneering manner which girls get when they begin to lose their grip.

She used to come in and talk things over with me. I got her a job once or twice, but it was no use. Sorry as I was for her, I'd have bet anyone that Maggie was done for. A couple more spells in the Detention Ward, a real bad cold and Maggie'd be off the streets for good.

Then one night, Nick Allen picked her up and in a spirit of drunken bravado married her.

Nick was about as far gone as she was. He'd been first mate on a tramp steamer, the Southern Cross, a dinty little tub in the coastwise trade. The Southern Cross wasn't choosey, but Nick's boozing and temper were too much even for it. So one day after he'd nearly murdered the Chinese cook he was kicked off. He'd been on the beach a month and he hadn't a bean when he married Maggie.

That was their start. You couldn't imagine a worse one.

I don't know what they did at first. Stayed drunk as long as they could, I suppose. But the next I knew they had managed to scrape up enough to open a little lunch wagon down near the docks and were doing pretty well at it.

I was surprised. Surprised, to begin with, that they'd stuck together at all. Marriage didn't seem exactly in their line. But somehow they'd taken a shine to each other.

That was nine years ago.

Today Nick owns a chain of sandwich shops and they have as pretty a little home as you'd want to see. They've adopted a couple of youngsters and Maggie is as contented as a clucking hen looking after her brood.

Maggie'd be surprised to know that she reminds me of a Bible text —a grand and solemn one at that:

"BELOVED, NOW ARE WE THE SONS OF GOD AND IT DOTH NOT YET APPEAR WHAT WE SHALL BE."

I don't pretend to understand all that text means.

I haven't the slightest concention of what God is, but it's plain to me that, even at their lowest, Maggie and Nick had something in them beside booze-soaked flesh and lust-crazed blood.

Something burning like a light in the darkness—

Something that eventually led them out of the darkness—

No psychologist on earth could have foreseen what Maggie and Nick would become, or engineered such a transformation. Only that Light could have done it—

Sometimes when I'm pretty well discouraged about myself I think of Maggie and Nick and take a fresh grip.

THE RHYMING OPTIMIST

By ALINE MICHAELIS

YOU bring me gifts, O kindly friend, that make toil's hours bright and with the purple twilight lend their portion of delight. Your gift of love, with insight true, can read the heart of man, and see, beyond poor things I do, the perfect tasks I plan. Your gift of trust brings to me still fresh courage for each hour, arms feeble faith and faltering will with swift, unfailing power. You bring me gifts, O friend of mine, for needs no others know; I make no plea, but you divine far ways where I would go. The hill-crests of my hopes you know, the valleys of my fears; you bring me gifts, dear friend, and so with strength I greet the years.

Meditations of a Wife

By HELEN ROWLAND

Nowadays, when a young man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of love, he promptly throws it into reverse.

Every woman has three ages—the age she looks, the age she THINKS she looks—and the one in the family Bible.

It's the "single standard" now in everything from hair-cuts and pajamas to banditry. Even our prize-fights and our beauty parlors are co-educational.

Those who get the most out of life are those who live intensively. Suppressing your emotions may be smart, but it is merely suppressing the life force within you.

No sophisticated girl believes in love these days—until it happens to her. And then, of course, it's "something different."

In modern society they're still "happily married" as long as he remembers her telephone number and she postcards him occasionally from Paris.

Women used to fall in love easily, but were afraid to kiss; now, they kiss easily, but are afraid to fall in love.

When Daughter threatened to elope, Father used to lock her in and rush out for a shotgun; now he rushes out for a ladder and leaves the window open.

Many a man has acquired a reputation for brilliancy and discretion because he had the discretion to hire a bright stenographer.

A man around the house all day is like a bumblebee in a closed car. The only man who is welcome in any house three times a day is the postman.

Letter to the Editor

Taxpayer Wants Probe

Editor, Boston American—As a taxpayer and a resident of the city of Boston, may I take this opportunity to commend you and your valuable newspaper for the courageous and honest editorials you are printing on the Exchange st. matter.

You deserve a great deal of credit for your fearless stand and the taxpayers of Boston should be grateful to you. As a taxpayer I feel that this whole mess has a cloud on it, and the proper authorities should proceed at once to investigate the whole matter and let the people of Boston who pay the bills know they have paid more than the property is worth.

Push it to the limit. Demand and compel an investigation and put the responsibility where it belongs.

New York Day by Day

By O. O. McINTYRE

New York, May 13—Diary of a modern Pepys: Off early to greet my mother-in-law, away many weeks in Florida, and to call on a recent literary success, who told me he was not only bored with popularity, but with people, all of which gave me a distinct neck ache.

Drove with my wife to Brooklyn for lunch, and again impressed with the easy-mannered calm and dignity of that borough, which seems a thousand miles from Manhattan madness. Back across the bridge and idled among the money changers in Wall Street.

In the evening to the Ship Grill, dining, on the ham Mr. Lebus brought from Kentucky, off a pine table scrubbed white, while ship bells chimed the hours. Then walked across town and loitered along the Broadway shop windows. Home to bed and reading a sickly love tale until the ash cans began to rattle.

The Manhattan janitor as a distinct type is passing. There are still a number left, but they lessen as building conditions improve. In his beehive community the janitor is comparable to the village gossip. He knows, sees and tells all and is czar in his domain of mutton and cabbage smells.

Tenants usually hate him, for excellent reasons, but must hide their feelings. His wife, almost invariably a slatternly woman with a knotted top side wisp of hair, has an acid tongue and regards everybody with that suspicious jealousy born of little lives.

She dislikes to be known as a "janitress," but may be addressed as "the assistant superintendent." In the high priced apartment house the janitor is no more. In this upper stratum he has become the superintendent, and interviews prospective tenants in braided coat across a glass topped desk.

The tenement of today is the glorified apartment of yesteryear. The wooden and walk-up structure with dim-lit halls and criss-crossed with fire escapes is almost a memory. The outmoded buildings are those with large and high-ceiled rooms, and the service is third rate, with the inevitable sulking and impudent West Indian elevator operator. They are the sublime in studied insolence, and to be assued with a British accent doesn't soften matters.

Yet the neighborliness amid the clamor of existence in the tenement building is by far the most pronounced in New York. There are no secrets. Once in awhile the drabness flares up into murder but simmers down again to meaningless monotony. All are trying to struggle up and are willing to lend a helping hand along the toiling way.

The tenement entrance is the open forum and clearing house for gossip. All the good and bad news filters through speaking tubes. Mothers and fathers collect in entrance to discuss their domestic, biologic and economic problems, boys and girls occupy the steps for love making, queer faces with queer bandages come in and out, and the doorway becomes the laboratory where every visitor undergoes a microscopic examination.

"I notice," writes someone who doesn't matter, "your frequent reference to your pearl gray hat. Is that the one you talk through?"

One would think I had only one hat. I'm a town man.

The son of a New York millionaire has decided to become both a tenor singer and the leader of a jazz orchestra. Not content to choose just one of two evils.

The newest in happy nonsense is to be an English imported playlet called: "Twee, Twee! Sh, ash! Now, Now! Come, Come!" And it is even money they feature a gossamer-winged lollipop with ribbon cuff links, a mincing walk and flapping wrists.

And a British fall overcoat model in a style show features 17 pockets, including one under each arm pit. With a coat like that a fellow would have to hire a pickpocket to get his handkerchief.

A gentleman in Florida writes he is a third rate lawyer, but thoroughly honest." Well, well!
